Clare Short: UK Government assistance to Albania began in 1993 and has focused on the regulation of capital markets, rural development, health reform, good government and the development of civil society. We have also provided assistance to Albania through multilateral organisations such as the EU, and during last year's disturbances we provided significant emergency assistance.

Early in 1997 there was a hiatus in bilateral assistance to Albania due to civil disturbances. Since then the programme has been restarted and is focusing on strengthening governance and civil society, rural development and health reform.

Figures for UK bilateral and multilateral assistance are as follows:

Bilateral

Aid and Development Projects

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the 10 largest aid or development projects funded directly by her Department in the 12 months from 1 September 1997; and if she will make a statement. [56225]

Clare Short [holding answer 26 October 1998]: I list below the ten largest new commitments made by my Department in the 12 months from 1 September 1997. These commitments include both project and programme aid.

Country	Project title	Commitment (£)
Uganda	Programme Aid for Poverty Reduction 1998–2000	40,000,000
Bangladesh	Bhairab Bridge Project	35,500,000
India	Andhra Pradesh Urban Services for the Poor	35,000,000
India	Civil Society Support Programme	25,000,000
Ghana	Programme Aid 1997	20,000,000
Tanzania	Programme Aid 1997–98	20,000,000
Uganda	Programme Aid (1997) Economic Reform and Primary Education	20,000,000
India	Partnerships for Sexual Health	18,940,000
India	UNICEF: Water and Environmental Sanitation	15,625,000
Sudan	WFP 1998 Sudan Programme (UN Appeal)	14,100,000

Commitments to individual projects are made within the framework of country strategies, prepared in consultation with partner governments, which determine the priorities for our development assistance. The overall objective of our country strategies, and the development assistance programme as a whole, is to contribute to the elimination of poverty, as set out in our White Paper published a year ago.

Jammu and Kashmir

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the current provision of aid to Jammu and Kashmir. [56717]

Clare Short: We are providing £500,000 this year to the International Committee of the Red Cross for their humanitarian assistance programme in Jammu and Kashmir and £60,000 to the Save the Children Fund. Under the Small Grants Scheme about £19,000 is being provided to help equip a maternity hospital in Anantnag.

Developing Countries

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development by what means her Department assesses the economies of developing countries; what is her Department's policy towards assisting such economies; and if she will make a statement. [56541]

Clare Short [holding answer 26 October 1998]: My Department has an experienced group of economic advisers who monitor economic developments in major partner countries. Key assessments of the economies of developing countries are brought together in our Country Strategy Papers. These are developed drawing on the World Bank International Monetary Fund, and other multilateral and national sources of information.

These strategy papers set out how we will build partnerships with poorer countries with the aim of poverty elimination through the promotion of sustainable development, in accordance with the policies in our White Paper, published last year.

Monitoring and Accounting Procedures

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what systems are in place for monitoring how her Department's budget is spent by (a) the EU and (b) other recipient organisations. [56224]

Clare Short [holding answer 26 October 1998]: My Department monitors closely spending by the European Commission and other multilateral organisations through regular consultations, participation in meetings of the relevant governing bodies, executive boards and management committees. We maintain an oversight of their financial management systems and their annual audited accounts. All organisations which receive Department for International Development (DFID) funds are required to provide regular certified statements of expenditure, and reports by external auditors.

Full details of DFID's monitoring and accounting procedures are set out in the Department's Office Instructions, copies of which are in the Library of the House of Commons. The European Commission and the Court of Auditors issue a variety of reports on EC development assistance, which the Government submit for Parliamentary scrutiny.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's assessment of the impact of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment on developing countries. [56538]

Clare Short [holding answer 26 October 1998]: Following France's decision to withdraw from MAI negotiations, it now seems most unlikely that an Agreement will be presented to Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) Ministers for signature in May 1999, as had been the intention of MAI negotiators. However the Government remain committed to working for the development of a liberal, rule-based system for international investment, which takes proper account of social, environmental and developmental issues, and which will be in the interests of developing countries.

Uganda

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the recipient projects in Uganda of the £67 million for educational assistance. [56535]

Clare Short [holding answer 26 October 1998]: The £67 million is to be disbursed over a five year period in support of the Government of Uganda's Education Sector Investment Plan (ESIP). The main priority of the ESIP is the achievement of Universal Primary Education by 2003, which is itself an important component of Uganda's broader poverty eradication effort.

The ESIP has been developed with UK assistance in partnership with the Government of Uganda and other donors. It is to run from 1997 to 2003 and is expected to cost some £430 million in recurrent expenditure (1998–2001) and at least £370 million in new investment proposals. £60 million of our overall commitment will be disbursed as budgetary assistance towards these costs. The remaining £7 million is to be used for technical co-operation in support of the overall programme (including audit and financial reporting). As such, our contributions will not be tied to any particular projects but are intended to support the realisation of the ESIP programme as a whole.

DEFENCE

Ships Support Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the targets set for the Ships Support Agency on upkeep period timeliness for each of the years 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99; what were the achievements against the target in 1996–97 and 1997–98; and what factors influenced the selection of the target for 1998–99. [56038]

Mr. Spellar: The Ships Support Agency's targets and achievements against target for Upkeep period timeliness in 1996–97 may be found in the Cabinet Office's Next Steps Report 1997, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The Agency's targets and achievements against target in 1997–98 are published in the Agency's Annual Report for 1997–98, a copy of which is also in the Library of the House. For the 1998–99 targets, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the former Minister for the Armed Forces to my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mrs. Gilroy) on 5 June 1998, Official Report, columns 397–98.

The target for 1998–99 has been adjusted with the agreement of the Agency's owner, Chief of Fleet Support, and its customers to take account of known overruns on maintenance projects which were already in progress in April 1998, and the budget allocated to the Agency.

RPAX Insurance Scheme

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Territorial Army and (b) other reserve forces personnel are members of the RPAX insurance scheme; and what change there has been in membership since the scheme's inception. [56065]

Mr. Doug Henderson: RPAX is a private insurance scheme provided for members of the Reserve Forces by Aon Risk Services. My Department strongly encourages Reservists to take advantage of the benefits that the scheme provides, but it is for Reservists themselves to decide whether they should do so. My Department therefore keeps no record of the number of Reservists who have joined the scheme, though I understand that the number joining has risen steadily since it was introduced in 1991.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of operating the Defence Export Services Organisation in each of the last three financial years. [56738]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Redundant Military Equipment

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements exist to assist (a) public museums, (b) private museums and (c) private collectors in the acquisition of surplus or redundant military equipment. [56437]

Mr. Spellar: This subject was raised by the hon. Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers), on behalf of the naval museums, during the Easter Adjournment debate on 8 April 1998, Official Report, columns 282–84. I subsequently met him on 3 June.

Following that meeting, I instructed officials in my Department to draft a set of guidelines to put in place more effective procedures for ensuring that assistance in obtaining surplus equipment can be provided to museums. In conducting this study officials in my Department will be consulting interested parties outside the Ministry of Defence.

It would be premature, at this stage, to speculate on the outcome. I will write to the hon. Member for Colchester, once the new guidelines have been endorsed.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the names of those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 May 1997, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and whether they receive remuneration. [56800]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Pay and Personnel Agency

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors were taken into account when deciding to relocate the PPA Pensions Office from Worcester to Cheadle Hulme; what assessment was made of the impact on the Worcester area of the change; what assessment he has made of the effect on the quality of work following the move; and if he will make a statement. [56561]

Mr. Spellar: The proposal to close the Pay and Personnel Agency (PPA) pensions office in Worcester and move the work to the existing spare accommodation on the PPA site in Cheadle Hulme arose from an efficiency review of the whole of the PPA.

The main factors in the report were the proposals for the most efficient running of the PPA and the important savings arising from implementing them. I understand the disappointment of the 130 staff currently employed in the Worcester office but the proposed closure is part of a reorganisation of the Agency which, when completed, will produce significant and necessary savings in running costs. The review recognised the possibility of redundancies in the Worcester office, although the MOD will aim to find alternative work for as many staff as possible.

The PPA management board are confident that the work can be satisfactorily transferred to Cheadle Hulme thus avoiding redundancies there. They also recognise the need for a careful transfer of skills to ensure that there is no lessening in the quality of the pensions work undertaken by the PPA.

The efficiency review recommendations are currently the subject of consultation with MOD Trade Union officials and I shall make a further statement when that process is completed.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland Assembly

10. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the progress of the Northern Ireland Assembly towards taking over executive functions. [54770]

16. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on progress made in respect of the new Assembly for Northern Ireland. [54777]

Mr. Paul Murphy: A considerable amount of work has yet to be completed before executive and legislative responsibilities could be transferred to the Assembly. There has yet to be agreement on the number and responsibilities of ministerial offices, or on the elements of a programme for government, or on areas for co-operation between North and South and how such co-operation should be put into effect. Even once agreements are reached, several Orders and Orders-in-Council will need to be made so that they can be given effect.

Both my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the Prime Minister are engaged in intensive discussions with the parties and the Irish Government with a view to reaching early agreement on how the necessary preliminary decisions can best be reached.

Parades Commission

11. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions she has had with members of the Parades Commission concerning decisions taken by the commission in the summer. [54772]

Mr. Ingram: The Parades Commission is an independent body which makes decisions in respect of individual parades solely on the basis of the criteria laid down in the Public Processions Act 1998. The legislation also provides that the Secretary of State may, on application by the Chief Constable, review a determination issued by the Commission. For these reasons she did not discuss with the Parades Commission determinations being considered by it.

Paramilitary Groups

12. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many assaults and murders have been carried out by paramilitary groups since 1 August. [54773]

Mr. Ingram: Since 1 August, there has been one terrorist incident which led to the deaths of 29 persons in Omagh. This atrocity was subsequently claimed by the Real IRA. During the same period there have been 31 paramilitary style assaults as attributed in the table:

	Attributed to Loyalist Groups	Attributed to Republican Groups	Total
Deaths	0	29	29
Paramilitary style attacks
Shootings	6	1	7
Assaults	20	4	24

Notes:

1. The above figures refer to the number of casualties as distinct from the number of incidents.
2. All statistics are subject to minor adjustment, as further information comes to light.

Integrated Education

13. Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to expand the opportunities for children to attend integrated schools. [54774]

Mr. McFall: Government will continue to respond to parental demand for integrated education by supporting the robust proposals for new Grant-Maintained Integrated schools or for the transformation of existing schools to integrated status. This year Malone Integrated College, an independent integrated secondary school, was awarded grant-aided status and six schools were given approval for transformation, bringing the total number of integrated schools to 40. A working group has also been established to examine ways of encouraging and promoting the further development of integrated education.

26. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made on developing integrated schools. [54787]

Mr. McFall: This year Malone Integrated college, an independent integrated secondary school, was awarded grant-aided status and 6 schools were given approval to transform to integrated status, bringing the total number of integrated schools to 40 with a total enrolment of over 10,000 pupils. A working group has also been established to examine ways of encouraging and promoting the further development of integrated education.

Economy

14. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in promoting a strong and sustainable economy in Northern Ireland. [54775]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dudley, South (Mr. Pearson), Official Report, column 324.

Belfast Agreement

15. Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she is taking to ensure that proposals contained in the Belfast Agreement are enshrined in legislation. [54776]

Marjorie Mowlam: The proposals in the Belfast Agreement are contained in the Northern Ireland Bill which was introduced to this House on 15 July, receiving its Third Reading on 31 July. Following consultations with the Northern Ireland political parties a number of changes and technical amendments were introduced after the Bill received its Second Reading in another place on 5 October. I expect the Bill to complete its parliamentary stages within the next few weeks opening the way for the Belfast Agreement to take effect in the new year.

Peace Process

17. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement about the development of the peace process. [54778]

20. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on progress made in the Northern Ireland peace process. [54781]

Marjorie Mowlam: We are continuing to do everything in our power to implement all aspects of the Belfast Agreement. It produced solid gains for all those involved and it remains the best hope for long term peace, political stability and reconciliation in Northern Ireland. While some difficult issues remain to be resolved, progress is being made on a number of fronts. The First Minister and Deputy First Minister, in consultation with the other parties, are preparing proposals regarding Ministerial portfolios; the shadow Assembly met during September and most recently on Monday 26 October and has positively addressed a range of issues; the Northern Ireland Bill is under detailed scrutiny in another place; the Police Commission, under the chairmanship of Chris Patten, has commenced work and the review of criminal justice is under way; measures to normalise the security situation have been introduced; and the early release programme has commenced.

Terrorists

18. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if those convicted of terrorist offences related to Northern Ireland (a) in Northern Ireland and (b) in England and Wales since the Good Friday Agreement will be eligible for the increased remission of sentence provided for in the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998. [54779]

Mr. Ingram: Eligibility to apply for accelerated release is clearly spelt out in the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998. Only those convicted of qualifying offences committed before 10 April 1998 will be eligible to be considered for release in accordance with the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998.

Independent Commission on Policing

19. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the work of the Independent Commission on Policing. [54780]

Mr. Ingram: The Independent Commission is consulting widely and has received almost 2,000 submissions—the vast majority from individual members of the public. It has met with key figures in the field of policing and has recently held a number of public meetings. As the Agreement says, the Commission will report no later than Summer 1999.

Local Government

21. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the future funding of local government in Northern Ireland. [54782]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The present funding of local government in Northern Ireland is provided from the proceeds of the district rates; the General Exchequer Grant; other specific grants; loans; and fees and charges for services. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Decommissioning

22. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many illegally held weapons and explosive devices have been voluntarily decommissioned since 1 January. [54783]

Mr. Ingram: No weapons or explosives have yet been decommissioned. The British and Irish Governments brought decommissioning schemes into force on 30 June in accordance with the Agreement. All parties must implement the Agreement in full for it to work, including the decommissioning requirements.

Guardsmen Fisher and Wright

23. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the case of Guardsmen Fisher and Wright. [54784]

Mr. Ingram: Guardsmen Fisher and Wright were released on life licence by the Secretary of State on 2 September 1998. This decision took into account that while the Secretary of State had been carrying out a review of the cases, the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 became law. Although she was aware that the Guardsmen had applied to the Sentence Review Commission for early release, the Secretary of State was conscious that the Sentences Act enables the early release of prisoners who were engaged in terrorism. The Guardsmen were in Northern Ireland as a consequence of that terrorism and committed the offence while on duty to counter it. At the time of her decision the Secretary of State was also aware that the first possible releases under the Sentences Act could have taken place from 7 September onwards.

Taking all these factors into account, and having consulted the Lord Chief Justice as required by statute, the Secretary of State decided that the Guardsmen should be released on life licence under the Prison Act 1953.

Terrorist Offences

24. Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what major terrorist incidents pertaining to Northern Ireland have occurred since 15 July; and which organisations the RUC assesses to have been responsible. [54785]

Mr. Ingram: The RUC has advised that the following major terrorist incidents have occurred since 15 July 1998.

Date	Location	Details	Attribution
19 July 1998	Dill House, New Lodge, Belfast	Andrew Kearney was shot in both legs after approximately 8 men had forced their way into his home. He died from his injuries.	Members of IRA
21 July 1998	Corry Square, RUC, Newry	A MK 15 mortar launched at the station from a van parked in a car park nearby. No injuries.	Claimed by RIRA
27 July 1998	Garvagh Court, Londonderry	Five masked and armed men forced entry into the home of Anthony and Francis Creane. Both brothers were shot and seriously wounded.	Loyalists

Date	Location	Details	Attribution
1 August 1998	Banbridge Town Centre	Following coded telephone warnings a car bomb exploded. Approximately 35 persons injured and extensive damage to the town.	Claimed by RIRA
6 August 1998	Narrow Water, Warrenpoint	An explosion was heard in this area. A substantial crater was located during the subsequent clearance operation.	Republican
15 August 1998	Market Street, Omagh	A bomb contained in an abandoned car exploded at this location. Twenty-nine persons were killed and hundreds injured.	RIRA
5 September 1998	Portadown	Constable Frankie O'Reilly was seriously injured by a blast bomb which was thrown at police lines. He died from his injuries on 6 October 1998.	Claimed by Red Hand Defenders

Note:
The RUC does not categorise terrorist incidents as major or otherwise, as there are inherent difficulties in that what may be perceived by one person as a major terrorist incident may not be perceived as such by another. This table has been provided in order to be as helpful as possible.

27. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the number of terrorist acts of violence over the past six months. [54788]

Mr. Ingram: During the past 6 months there have been 44 deaths as a result of the security situation including the deaths of 29 innocent members of the public at Omagh and more recently the murder of RUC Constable Frank O'Reilly. Furthermore, there have been an unacceptable number of brutal paramilitary style assaults which have no place in a civilised society.

Nevertheless—and despite these appalling incidents—overall paramilitary activity is at an historically low level. This is a direct consequence of the Belfast Agreement. As it takes root, the Government and the vast majority of people of Northern Ireland share the hope and the determination that the frequency of paramilitary violence will be further reduced and eventually become a thing of the past.

Drumcree

25. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of this year's security operation mounted at Drumcree. [54786]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for West Tyrone (Mr. Thompson), Official Report, column 328.

Higher Education

28. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Northern Ireland first year students have accepted places in English, Scottish and Welsh universities and colleges for the 1998–99 academic year; and how this number compares with the total number of Northern Ireland students who enrolled in English, Scottish and Welsh universities and colleges in each of the previous four years. [54789]

Mr. McFall: The information requested is as follows:

	English universities and colleges	Scottish universities and colleges	Welsh universities and colleges
1994–95	1,989	1,504	115
1995–96	2,110	1,482	118
1996–97	2,248	1,633	133
1997–98	2,506	1,690	155
1998–99[1]	2,339	1,665	163

[1] Position at 23 September 1998 Final figures will not be available until November

Football Clubs

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what support Her Majesty's Government intends to provide for football clubs in Northern Ireland to enable them to meet the standards demanded by health and safety legislation. [56341]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Funds are currently available to football clubs in Northern Ireland through the Sport Lottery Fund, administered by the Sports Council, to assist them to meet the standards demanded by health and safety legislation. The Government plan to introduce new legislation to improve safety standards at sports grounds in Northern Ireland and are currently considering the financial implications for clubs.

Fraud

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the number and type of suspected fraud cases which have been investigated in agencies answerable to Northern Ireland departments by department and year since 1995, indicating how many (a) proved erroneous, (b) required no further action and (c) were proven; and what were the penalties in respect of (c). [55574]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information for the Northern Ireland Departments is listed in the table.

[1] External fraud relates to fraud by Social Security Agency customers. These statistics are held on a tax year basis.

[2] No breakdown available

[3] The number of proven cases does not equal the number of cases on which legal proceedings are taken because not all cases are suitable for prosecution. In cases where fraud has been proven (whether or not legal proceedings have been pursued) action is normally taken to seek recovery of the overpayment.

Punishment Beatings and Shootings

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishment shootings have taken place in Northern Ireland since 1 January; and how many of these the RUC has attributed to (i) Irish Republican and (ii) Loyalist terrorist organisations. [54761]

Mr. Ingram: From 1 January to 30 September 1998 there have been 58 paramilitary style shootings, 27 attributed to Loyalist groups and 31 attributed to Republican groups. There have been 107 paramilitary style assaults, 67 by Loyalists and 40 by Republicans.

Schools (Newtownards)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what areas of Victoria Primary School in Newtownards are not being used; what is the reason; and if he will make a statement. [56780]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I understand from the South Eastern Education and Library Board that the assembly hall at Victoria Primary school has been closed because of structural defects. The Board has given approval for the structural upgrading of the hall and the replacement of its windows. Tenders are about to be sought and work should commence in the near future. When work is complete the hall will be re-opened.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals there are to replace Castle Gardens Primary School in Newtownards; what is the timetable for such a proposal; and if he will make a statement. [56779]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The South-Eastern Education and Library Board proposes to replace Castle Gardens Primary School on a new site on the Bowtown Road. Planning for this is at an advanced stage and the school will be considered for a place in next year's capital programme in light of the resources available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hill Livestock Compensatory Payments

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the comparative rates of hill livestock compensatory payments in the United Kingdom and each other member state of the European Union, expressed in terms of ecus per livestock units. [56908]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 October 1998]: The information requested is not available in up to date form. The European Commission has previously provided the following crude data on the average amount of compensatory allowance paid in 1994:

EU Member State	Average amount of less favoured area compensatory allowance per livestock unit
Belgium	85
Denmark	n/a
Germany	93
Greece	61
Spain	36
France	70
Ireland	88
Italy	57
Luxembourg	113
Netherlands	104
Portugal	54
United Kingdom	47

n/a = not applicable

European Commission working document

It is up to each member state to determine the rates which are appropriate to its own circumstances and the precise conditions which may attach to these payments. The EU legislation requires that the payment must reflect the degree of permanent natural handicap which is found to exist in the Less Favoured Areas.

BSE

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the correspondence between his Department and Dr. Anthony Parish of the University of East Anglia in relation to BSE and toxic reactions to pesticide/ insecticide chemicals. [55541]

Mr. Rooker: It is not normal practice for the Ministry to place in the Library correspondence between this Department and a private individual and I am not prepared to set such a precedent in respect of Dr. Parish. If Dr. Parish wishes to publish his theory on the origins of BSE, he should submit it to a journal which publishes that type of material.

Banned Antibiotics

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his Danish counterpart concerning the decision of the Danish Government to ban the use in animals of virginiamycin; and if he will make a statement. [56273]

Mr. Rooker: At the October Agriculture Council meeting, which was attended by my right hon. Friend the Minister, Denmark presented a paper on antimicrobial resistance, which reflected the conclusions of a conference of Chief Medical Officers of the EU in Copenhagen in September. The Minister was represented by the Chief Executive of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and the Copenhagen Conference was also attended by two members of the Veterinary Products Committee, which advises the Government on veterinary medicines and zootechnical feed additives, including growth promoters.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his Swedish counterpart concerning the decision by the Swedish Government in 1986 to ban the use of antibiotics in animals when used as growth promoters; what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the ban; and if he will make a statement. [56272]

Mr. Rooker: The matter was discussed at a meeting between my right hon. Friend the Minister and the Swedish Minister on 19 October. The United Kingdom was represented at a conference in Stockholm in September on "The Swedish Model of Animal Production" by the Chief Executive of Veterinary Medicines Directorate and the Chairman of the independent, scientific Veterinary Products Committee which advises the Government on veterinary medicines and zootechnical feed additives, including growth promoters.

Industry figures indicate that the use of antibiotic growth promoters saves about 2.25 million tonnes of animal feed in the European Union each year.

Public Analyst Arrangements

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the review of Public Analyst arrangements in England and Wales to be completed. [57227]

Mr. Rooker: The Chairman of the Review Group has now submitted its report to me. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House and will be sent to those who made submissions to the Group. It will also be made available on the Ministry's web site. I am grateful to the Chairman and members of the Group for the timely completion of their review. The Government will need to give careful consideration to the large number of detailed recommendations and decide how to carry them forward in consultation with the other relevant bodies.

DEFENCE

Armed Services Personnel

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what categories of criminal record debar a candidate from joining Her Majesty's armed forces. [54905]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The regulations with regard to applicants with criminal records differ slightly for each Service. However, in general, any custodial sentence, including corrective training, youth custody, and detention, would debar a candidate from joining any of the Armed Forces. Additionally, any conviction for sexual offences, under the Sexual Offences Acts 1956, 1967 or 1985; the Street Offences Act 1959; the Indecency with Children Act 1960; the Protection of Children Act 1978; or the Sex Offenders Act 1997, or for misuse of drugs will debar candidates from entry. Experimentation with soft drugs, however, is not an automatic disqualification from Armed Forces employment. For other minor convictions each application will be considered on merit and the nature of the offence.

All criminal convictions and police cautions must be declared for security clearance purposes. All personnel recruited into the Naval Service and the RAF, all Army Officers, and some Army Other Ranks in specific trades, for example the Intelligence Corps, require security clearance before entry. The requirements of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1978 are always taken into consideration.

Territorial Army

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of the reduction of the TA establishment on the closure of local TA centres in Liverpool. [56827]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Proposals for the future of the Territorial Army and local TA centres have not yet been put to Ministers for their consideration.

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of a reduction in TA strength on related cadet forces where TA centres are closed. [56834]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It is the aim of my Department to ensure that any disruption to cadet units arising from the restructuring of the Territorial Army should be kept to a minimum. Wherever necessary alternative accommodation will be provided for any cadet group which shares premises with a TA unit that is affected by the restructuring process.

Territorial, Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserve Associations

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of TAVRAs in providing the TA with value for money in property management and utility provision; [56832]

(2) what steps he will take to retain the Territorial, Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserve Associations in the implementation of the Strategic Defence Review. [56833]

Mr. Doug Henderson: An appraisal of the supply services provided to the Reserve Forces by the Territorial, Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserve Associations (TAVRAs) was undertaken as part of the Strategic Defence Review. The Review made clear that the Department recognised and valued the support of the TAVRAs. We consider the Associations are an essential part of the management of the Reserves and Cadets, and attach great importance to their contribution in a wide range of activities.

The Strategic Defence Review therefore concluded that the TAVRAs should continue in the future. The Review concluded that there should be some changes to the boundaries of the regions for which Associations are responsible, and to their funding arrangements, to reflect the closer integration between Army Regulars and Reservists. The Associations are closely involved in the development of these proposals.

Pilots

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF pilots have completed training in each of the last five years. [56754]

Mr. Doug Henderson: RAF pilots are classified as passing into 'productive service' following completion of the various stages of pilot training up to and including Operational Conversion Unit training on particular aircraft. Numbers entering 'productive service' in each of the last 5 financial years were as follows:

1994–95	71
1997–98	105

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Royal Navy Air Service units currently have a shortage of trained pilots; and what is the total extent of the shortfalls. [56750]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The following Naval Air Squadrons have a shortage of trained pilots: 899, 800, 801, 702, 810, 819 and 845. This amounts to a total shortage of 12 trained pilots.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Defence Sales Organisation of the Ministry of Defence was informed of the visit of Senator Pinochet of Chile to the United Kingdom in September and October 1998; and over what parts of his programme they were consulted by British Aerospace. [57024]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 October 1998]: The Defence Export Services Organisation of my Department first became aware of the visit of Senator Pinochet to the UK around 6 October. They were not consulted by British Aerospace over any part of his programme.

Trident

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Trident missiles have been deployed on each United Kingdom Trident patrol since 1995. [55871]

Radiation Exposure

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many claims his Department has received from former service personnel arising from exposure to radiation whilst serving on Royal Navy submarines. [57167]

Military Land (Surplus)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present acreage of military land in the United Kingdom that is regarded as surplus to needs and will be offered for sale. [57434]

Mr. Spellar: The amount of land which my Department has in disposal changes constantly as some properties are sold and others are declared surplus to military requirements. However, we currently estimate that some 13,000 hectares of land is in disposal and more is likely to come forward as a result of the recent Strategic Defence Review.

Arm Sales (Turkey)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the value of arms sales to Turkey by the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and if he will list the equipment sold. [57474]

Mr. Spellar: My Department is currently working with the FCO and the DTI to assemble information in preparation for the Government's first Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls. The Report will include details of export licence applications for UK Military List items and details of such equipment exported with annual values. When the Report is issued I will also write to my hon. Friend in regard to the information requested for previous years and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Housing Executive (Scotland)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many properties he estimates will be required by the Defence Housing Executive in Scotland to meet the needs of service personnel at 1 April (a) 1999, (b) 2000 and (c) 2005. [57036]

Mr. Spellar: The DHE are currently working on the figures:

(b) 2000: 5,354

(c) 2005: 5,104.

The 2005 assumptions are an estimate pending the full implementation of Strategic Defence Review recommendations.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the amount of rent/violent profits abated in respect of due rent in Defence Housing Executive properties in Scotland (a) in the financial year 1996–97, (b) in the financial year 1997–98 and (c) from 1 April 1998 to date. [57034]

Mr. Spellar: The amount of rent/violent profits abated is as follows:

(b) 1997–98: 0

(c) 1998–99: 10,000.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans the Defence Housing Executive has to (a) sell, (b) demolish and (c) otherwise dispose of housing stock in Scotland which it has identified as being surplus to requirements. [57037]

Mr. Spellar: The current plans are:

(a) To sell 352 properties

(b) To demolish 265 properties

(c) To lease 118 properties to a Housing Association.

The remainder of properties are being held both to maintain a management margin of vacant quarters and for refurbishment, and until the effects of the Strategic Defence Review are fully evaluated.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many eviction orders have been awarded to the Defence Housing Executive in Scotland in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998 to date. [57033]

Mr. Spellar: The following eviction orders have been awarded:

(a) 1996: 0

(b) 1997: 21

(c) 1998: 25.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many evictions have been raised by the Defence Housing Executive in Scotland in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998 to date. [57032]

Mr. Spellar: The number of evictions raised by DHE are as follows:

(a) 1996: 0

(b) 1997: 29

(c) 1998: 57.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Defence Housing Executive properties there are in Scotland; how many are presently occupied; how many of these are occupied by (a) serving forces personnel,

(b) former forces personnel, (c) the partners of serving and former forces personnel, (d) irregular tenants, (e) tenants and (f) others, under tenancy agreements. [57031]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently 6,091 Defence Housing Executive properties in Scotland.

(a) 4,092 properties occupied by serving forces personnel

(b) 57 properties occupied by former forces personnel

(c) 57 properties occupied by partners of serving and former forces personnel

(d) 114 properties are occupied by irregular tenants (The definition of Irregular Occupants is described at (b) and (c) i.e. former forces personnel and partners of serving and former forces personnel. The response at d is, therefore, the sum of (b) and (c)

(e) 165 properties are under other tenancy agreements.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many unoccupied Defence Housing Executive properties there were in Scotland in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998. [57035]

Mr. Spellar: The numbers of unoccupied properties in Scotland were as follows:

(b) 1997: 1,312

(c) 1998: 1,509.

VC10 Aeroplane Repairs

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 October 1998, Official Report, column 891, on VC10 aeroplane repairs, when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon. [57232]

Mr. Spellar: I expect to be able to write to the hon. Member shortly. The information is not held in the precise form requested and it might not be possible to provide the full financial information without incurring disproportionate cost. Considerable progress has been made but further interrogation of IT systems is required, particularly in respect of the value of spares consumed.

SCOTLAND

Salmon

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the outbreak of an anaemia virus in farmed salmon. [56160]

Mr. Macdonald: Infectious Salmon Anaemia was first confirmed at a site in Loch Nevis on 16 May 1998. Since then the disease has been confirmed on a further 9 sites, the latest on 18 September. Eleven further sites are also formally under suspicion. There are 340 sites in Scotland involved in fish farming.

Measures designed to eradicate the disease are being carried out in strict accordance with EC and domestic legislation. As part of that, movement restrictions have been imposed on fish farms within an area of 40 km surrounding the confirmed and suspected sites.

The original cause of the outbreak has not yet been established but inquiries are continuing. Rigorous testing and surveillance are also being maintained and my Department is in close contact with the European Commission and with the Norwegian authorities, who have longer experience of the disease.

The Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food has been invited to consider the risks for human health. It noted that there is no current evidence of any fish virus causing disease in humans, and that the ISA virus is unable to replicate at human body temperatures. It concluded that there is currently no evidence that ISA poses a risk to human health. This is consistent with experience in Norway and Canada.

Water and Sewerage Authorities

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the external finance limits that will apply to the Scottish Water and Sewerage Authorities in 1999–2000 and in the following two years; and if he will make a statement. [57729]

Mr. Macdonald: The External Finance Limits (EFLs) for the 3 water authorities have been set at £206.904 million for 1999–2000. The allocation to each water authority will be: North Authority £51.000 million, East Authority £70.500 million, and West Authority £85.404 million.

Indicative EFLs for 2000–01 and 2001–02 have been set at £206.954 million and £208.018 million respectively. The indicative allocations for 2000–01 and 2001–02 will be: North Authority £40.000 million and £40.000 million, East Authority £76.000 million and £76.000 million, and West Authority £90.954 million and £92.018 million.

This settlement represents a significant real increase in the resources available to the industry, offering each authority greater sums for investment over the 3 year period than they planned for in their current corporate plans. It demonstrates the Government's commitment to securing the modernisation of the Scottish water industry.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Vaccine

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment his Department has made of (a) the safety of the MMR vaccines and (b) the links the vaccines have with the development of autism in children; what representations he has received from abroad about the potential link with autism; what assessment he has made of the regulatory action which has been taken by other countries; and if he will make a statement; [56967]

(2) if he will assess the findings contained in the paper by Dr Andrew Wakefield published in The Lancet on MMR vaccinations. [56972]

Mr. Galbraith: Dr. Wakefield's paper has been considered by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation and by a group of independent experts convened by the Medical Research Council on 23 March 1998 to consider the relevant evidence in view of suggestions that MMR vaccination was linked to autism and inflammatory bowel disease, especially Crohn's Disease. This group concluded, as had the Committee, that there was no evidence of any causal link. In the light of the Committee's views and the conclusions of the group of experts, the Chief Medical Officer for Scotland wrote to Health Boards and general practitioners on 27 March 1998 recommending strongly that parents continue to have their children immunised with the MMR vaccine. My right hon. Friend has received no representations from abroad about the alleged link with autism.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce single vaccine components of MMR. [56976]

Mr. Galbraith: My right hon. Friend is advised on vaccination and immunisation policy by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation. The Committee has not recommended the introduction of single vaccine components of MMR and he has no plans to do so.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will establish a review of (a) the effectiveness of and (b) side effects from the most recent national MMR vaccination campaign. [56979]

Mr. Galbraith: MMR vaccination is now established as a normal component of the childhood vaccination programme. The safety and efficacy of all vaccines are kept under continuing surveillance by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation.

Autism

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children below the age of five years were diagnosed as being autistic in each year since 1970. [56974]

Mr. Galbraith: This information is not held centrally.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MPs (EU Travel)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Council if she will seek an increase in her Vote to allow hon. Members to travel once a year to each EU member state for the purpose of meeting members of national parliaments of EU member states. [57311]

Mrs. Beckett: Since the amount spent on the EU travel scheme at present is significantly less than the annual budget, any extension of the scheme would not require an increase in the Voted expenditure.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Council how many (a) Labour, (b) Conservative and (c) Liberal Democrat hon. Members took advantage of their right to annual travel to an EU institution in each year since 1994. [57310]

Mrs. Beckett: With the exception of Financial Assistance to Opposition Parties the financial records supporting the Members' Vote are not analysed by party. The information requested is not available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

The total number of Members who travelled to EU Institutions, analysed by financial year, is as follows:

1997–98: 89.

TREASURY

World War I Loans

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Britain's debt owed to the US Treasury in respect of loans made during World War One; and what plans he has for repayment. [56940]

Ms Hewitt: At the end of World War I the United Kingdom was owed more by other nations than it owed to the United States. No payments have been made to or received from other nations since 1934.

Data Archive

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 35, if he will make it his policy that hon. Members should be able to obtain without payment tabulations of data sets which have been paid for from public funds and which are available from the Data Archive. [57220]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 29 October 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the Data Archive.

The Data Archive is a national resource centre funded by the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) and the Joint Information Systems Committee (JISC). It is for the ESRC—which is outside of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's remit—to advise upon the charging policy for the Data Archive.

European Income Tax

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make it policy to veto any EU proposals regarding the introduction of a European income tax; [57123]

(2) if he will make it his policy to veto any EU proposals regarding the harmonisation of income tax rates. [57122]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government's firm view is that decisions on the rates and structure of income tax should remain a matter for national Governments. Decisions on European tax issues are subject to unanimity.

Charity Welfare Services (VAT Exemption)

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will announce the outcome of the review by Customs and Excise of the VAT exemption for charity welfare services. [57891]

Ms Hewitt: From today Customs and Excise will be consulting interested parties to agree the circumstances in which a wider range of charity welfare services will be exempt. Customs is reviewing its policy following a recent VAT and Duties Tribunal decision. This extended the definition of welfare services to include daily living tasks such as cooking, cleaning and laundry, where there was sufficiently high risk to the recipients' health because of their inability to perform these tasks safely themselves.

EU Taxation Policies

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the proposed European Union withholding tax on dividends. [57459]

Dawn Primarolo: The draft Directive deals with interest paid to individuals across national boundaries within the European Community. We are in favour of effective international action against tax evasion and are playing an active and constructive part in discussions on the draft Directive. But we have made it clear that we will not agree to any course of action which would seriously damage the UK and other European financial markets.

Tax Law Rewrite Project

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on further developments on the Tax Law Rewrite project. [57734]

Dawn Primarolo: I am delighted to announce that the Tax Law Rewrite is making good progress. The Inland Revenue have today published a third Exposure Draft which rewrites the capital allowance provisions for industrial buildings. The rewritten legislation in this Exposure Draft will form part of the first Rewrite Bill. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The Rewrite project aims to bring clarity and certainty to our direct tax legislation, and commands my continuing support. Consultation is the key to the success of the project. I would urge anybody with an interest in tax legislation to take this further opportunity to comment on the rewritten legislation while still in its formative stages. It is an excellent opportunity to influence the statute book of the future.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Reception Classes (Grants)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance he has issued to local education authorities in respect of the use of grants available to them under the Nursery Education and Grant-Maintained Schools Act 1996 and subsequent legislation, for children to be educated in primary school reception classes until the term in which they attain the age of five. [57218]

Ms Hodge: Funding is available through Revenue Support Grant and nursery education grant to provide three terms of early education before compulsory school age for all four-year-olds whose parents wish their children to take advantage of this. The places can be in the state, private or voluntary sectors, with the local Early Years Development Plan setting out where they will be secured. The Department has issued guidance on producing Early Years Development Plans and a document, "Requirements of Grant 1998–99", which sets out the eligibility criteria and conditions under which nursery education grant may be paid during the period April 1998 to March 1999.

Autism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that every local education authority is ensuring that all parents of children with autism fulfil their statutory obligations of ensuring that their child receives an efficient and suitable full-time education either at school or otherwise by taking action through the courts; and if he will make a statement. [57055]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Section 7 of the Education Act 1996 specifies that the parent of every child of compulsory school age shall cause him/her to receive full-time education suitable:

(a) to his/her age, ability and aptitude, and

(b) to any special educational needs he/she may have, either by regular attendance at school or otherwise.

Schools and LEAs are also under a duty to identify children with special educational needs, including those with autistic spectrum disorders, and to make provision which meet the needs of individual children. In doing so, schools and LEAs must have regard to the statutory guidance contained in the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs.

Where the authority is of the opinion that the child should attend school an LEA must by law serve a School Attendance Order (SAO) on the parent of a child of compulsory school age who fails to prove that the child is receiving suitable education.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that every child with autism receives a relevant educational service; and if he will make a statement. [57050]

Mr. Charles Clarke: In practice, a child with autistic spectrum disorder is likely to be assessed as having special educational needs. The Education Act 1996 section 317 specifies that the Local Education Authority or governing body shall use their best endeavours, in exercising their function in relation to the school, to secure that, if any registered pupil has special educational needs, the special educational provision which his or her learning difficulty calls for is made.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that every parent of a child of compulsory school age with autism is ensuring that their child receives an efficient and suitable full-time education either at school or otherwise; and if he will make a statement. [57054]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Section 7 of the Education Act 1996 specifies that the parent of every child of compulsory school age shall cause him/her to receive full-time education suitable:

(a) to his/her age, ability and aptitude, and

(b) to any special educational needs he/she may have, either by regular attendance at school or otherwise.

Schools and LEAs are also under a duty to identify children with special educational needs, including those with autistic spectrum disorders, and to make provision which meet the needs of individual children. In doing so, schools and LEAs must have regard to the statutory guidance contained in the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to issue specific guidance on educational services for autistic children; and if he will make a statement. [57052]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Guidance on educational services for children with autistic spectrum disorder is available on request from local education authorities. Information can also be obtained from the National Autistic Society.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that every local education authority has sufficient funds to develop new services for autistic children; and if he will make a statement. [57053]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Each year the Government set out what it considers a reasonable and affordable level of spending on education, and ensures funding to local authorities for that amount. Education is a key priority for this Government. For financial year 1998–99, national funding for education is £1,107 million, or 5.7 per cent. higher than for 1997–98. The Comprehensive Spending Review will provide an increase of almost £10 billion a year by 2001–2002, an average increase of 5.1 per cent. in real terms in each of the next three years. Each local education authority is responsible for allocating its budget between and within services. In doing so it must secure that sufficient schools are available to provide the opportunity of appropriate education for all pupils, including those with special educational needs such as autistic spectrum disorder.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures his Department is taking to ensure that LEAs make appropriate provision for individual children with autism. [56639]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 26 October 1998]: The Education Act 1996 places schools and local education authorities under a duty to identify children with special educational needs, including those with autistic spectrum disorders, and to make appropriate provision for them. In doing so, schools and LEAs must have regard to statutory guidance contained in the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs.

In the case of spectrum disorders like autism, provision can be made in specialist autism schools, other special schools, autism units at mainstream schools or in mainstream classes with support.

New Deal (Travel Concessions)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many travel companies have so far pledged to offer concessions to those benefiting from the New Deal for young unemployed; and what plans he has to extend this service to other target groups. [57144]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Association of Train Operating Companies (ATOC) have agreed to offer reduced fares to participants of New Deal for the 18–24 age group nationally. They will consider extending this to New Deal participants aged 25 and over once they have reviewed the 18–24 scheme.

There are a further 218 national and local agreements in place with bus and coach companies offering reduced fares for young people on New Deal. Of these, 95 have signed agreements to extend this facility to New Deal clients aged 25 and over. Negotiations are taking place regionally to extend agreements further for New Deal 25 plus.

Youth Employment

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of those who moved from the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds to unsubsidised employment between April and September 1998 are no longer in work. [56044]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 26 October 1998]: The latest published figures show 15,830 young people leaving New Deal between April and August 1998, to go into unsubsidised employment. These figures exclude any who have returned to claim JSA within 13 weeks of leaving New Deal. We do not know yet how many, if any, have left their jobs but not returned to claim JSA. Our detailed evaluation of New Deal will enable us to produce more detailed information, such as this, once a full cohort of New Deal participants has completed its progress through the programme.

Unemployment (Lowestoft)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the factors underlying recent trends in the level of unemployment in Lowestoft. [56760]

Mr. Andrew Smith: There are no ILO unemployment series for travel to work areas; so only claimant unemployment statistics can be presented.

In the Lowestoft and Beccles travel-to-work area, between September 1997 and September 1998 the claimant unemployment rate fell by 1.3 percentage points to 7.3 per cent; and the claimant count fell by 16 per cent. to around 3,180. The corresponding UK seasonally unadjusted figures were a fall of 0.6 percentage points in the claimant unemployment rate to 4.7 per cent. and a 12 per cent. reduction in the claimant count to around 1,334,275.

Because the data are seasonally unadjusted, it is not possible to assess the underlying trend month by month. However, over the last year unemployment in the Lowestoft and Beccles travel-to-work area continued to fall, reflecting steady growth in the economy and employment.

Intermediate Labour Markets

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment his Department has made of the effectiveness of intermediate labour markets in reducing long-term unemployment. [56982]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Department has commissioned the Institute for Employment Research to investigate current intermediate labour market programmes, and what evaluation evidence exists about their effectiveness. The research is due to be published before the end of this year, and I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

The Government are interested in any measure that has the potential to help in tackling long-term unemployment. Elements of the intermediate labour market approach are included in our Welfare to Work programme, through Employment Zones, the New Deals for the young unemployed and people with disabilities and the pilots under the New Deal for adult long-term unemployed. All these initiatives will be fully evaluated.

Primary Schools (Entry)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many local education authorities in England and Wales maintain a system of three-point entry into primary schools. [57219]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is not collected centrally in the form requested. The dates of entry to infant classes are for an individual school's admission authority to determine. The admission authority for county and voluntary controlled schools is the local education authority, and for voluntary aided and grant-maintained schools it is the school's governing body. A number of local education authorities do operate a three-point entry system within their primary admission arrangements. The Secretary of State will shortly be issuing a consultative draft of a new, statutory Code of Practice on School Admissions. The Code is expected to advise that local admission arrangements should aim to meet the preferences of local parents as far as possible, and that local consultation should take place on the arrangements within admissions forums.

School Buses

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assistance he will give to improving school transport and encouraging local authorities to extend the school bus pass system. [56214]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 26 October 1998]: In conjunction with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Department of Health, we have set up a School Travel Advisory Group to look at all aspects of home to school transport. This held its inaugural meeting, with a wide range of interested organisations, on 13 October and it will make recommendations in due course.

Infant Classes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress he has made in reducing class sizes for five, six and seven year olds. [57141]

Ms Estelle Morris: We expect to meet our class size pledge ahead of schedule. The School Standards and Framework Act 1998, which received Royal Assent on 24 July, places a duty on both local education authorities (LEAs) and governing bodies to limit the size of infant classes for 5,6 and 7 year olds to 30 or below by September 2001 at the latest—ahead of our Election pledge.

In January 1998 there were 485,000 infant pupils in classes over 30. In September 1998 the figure was 345,000 pupils. These figures show the effects of the allocation of the first tranche of class size funding—the £22 million allocated for 1,500 additional teachers from this September. We have also allocated £45 million to build some 600 extra classrooms to reduce class sizes. Following the Comprehensive Spending Review additional resources are available over the next three years to enable LEAs to meet the infant class size limit in nearly all schools by September 2000—18 months earlier than the Election pledge. A total of £620 million has been made available to deliver our infant class size policy.

LEAs are now in the process of submitting plans, for the Secretary of State's approval, setting out how they will implement the class size policy. We expect most of these to have been approved in early 1999.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many additional full-time qualified teachers have been identified by local education authorities in their plans for reducing infant class sizes as being required to implement (a) the required reduction in infant class sizes in the school years 1999–2000 and 2000–01 and (b) measures required under paragraph 10 of the Schedule to the Education (Plans for Reducing Infant Class Sizes) (England) Regulations 1998. [56901]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not available as plans to reduce infant class sizes have not yet been received from all LEAs. Once the plans are received, officials in the Department will be discussing them in detail with authorities.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many of the extra teachers which his Department reported had been recruited as part of the programme to reduce infant class sizes were recruited (a) on completion of teacher training courses, (b) from previous teaching posts in primary schools, (c) from posts in infant schools in local education authorities who were not provided with grants for recruitment and (d) from other sources; [56663]

(2) how many teachers of infant classes were in post in September (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [56664]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not available centrally.

Educational Psychologists

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the real rates of increase in each educational psychologist's pay award since 1990. [56450]

Ms Estelle Morris: These matters are the responsibility of the Soulbury Committee which operates under the auspices of the Local Government Management Board (LGMB). The information requested is therefore not collected centrally.

First Schools

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many first schools in three-tier systems have (a) fewer than 100 pupils,

(b) between 100 and 200, (c) between 200 and 300, (d) between 300 and 400, (e) between 400 and 500 and (f) more than 500 pupils. [56740]

Numbers of maintained first schools by size[1] in England in January 1998

Size of school (number of pupils)	Number of schools
less than 100	439
100 to 199	466

Middle Schools

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many middle schools in three-tier systems have (a) less than 300, (b) 300 to 400, (c) 400 to 500, (d) 500 to 600, (e) 600 to 700 and (f) more than 700 pupils. [56739]

Ms Estelle Morris: The latest available information is shown in the table.

Travellers' Children

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements he has made to ensure that travellers' children receive education. [56708]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Schools receive funding for the education of Traveller children in the same way as for other pupils on the school roll. In addition, and in recognition of the particular educational needs of Traveller children, schools and LEAs can benefit from additional support through a specific grant payable under Section 488 of the Education Act 1996. In the current financial year this grant is supporting expenditure of some £10.7 million across 3,400 English schools, mainly providing additional specialist teacher support. The grant aims to improve levels of school attendance and achievement amongst Traveller children, including their full integration alongside other children in mainstream education.

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what studies his Department has (a) conducted and (b) evaluated into the effects on children of special educational units being taught in (i) main-stream schools and (ii) special schools. [56722]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The 1997 Green Paper "Excellence for all children: meeting special educational needs" set out our view that there are strong educational, moral and social grounds for educating children with special educational needs with their peers. The great majority of consultation responses to the Green Paper supported the principle of inclusion for such children wherever possible. We have commissioned a small-scale research project to assess the relative costs, benefits and practical implications of educating children with moderate learning difficulties in mainstream and special schools, and expect to publish the project's findings later this year.

Music Therapy

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which Minister in his Department has responsibility for music therapy. [56192]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have responsibility for special educational needs, including provision of therapy services.

Rural Students

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans he has to ensure that students in rural areas are not excluded from further education or training because of transport costs; [56205]

(2) what plans he has to ensure that students in rural areas are not excluded from further education or training because of child care costs. [56204]

Mr. Mudie: We plan to introduce for September 1999 a new system of student support to replace discretionary awards which will be fairer and better targeted. Such a system will be responsive to individual needs such as transport and childcare and will take account of local circumstances. We expect to make an announcement on new arrangements before Christmas.

Help with the cost of childcare and transport is already available to young people in further education as part of the New Deal initiatives and through the National Childcare Strategy.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of national TEC expenditure in 1997–98 was allocated to (a) salaries and administration and (b) other activities. [56050]

Mr. Mudie: Based on the 1997–98 consolidated annual statutory audited accounts of 71 English TECs (out of a total of 73), the percentage of national expenditure allocated to (a) salaries and administration was 12 per cent. and (b) other activities was 88 per cent.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the relative percentages of national TEC expenditure during the first five years after establishment in relation to (a) training, (b) business support and (c) salaries and administration. [56057]

Mr. Mudie: The figures in the following table show the relative percentages of national TEC expenditure for the financial years ending 1995, 1996 and 1997 in relation to the headings requested as stated in the Department's appropriation accounts. Expenditure under these headings for previous years is not readily available.

University Drop-outs

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the cost to the Exchequer of students who dropped out of UK universities in each of the years 1992 to 1997. [56200]

Mr. Mudie: The cost to the Exchequer of students who drop out from UK universities depends on factors such as the timing of drop outs within academic years, the level of public funding associated with individual courses, whether or not students transfer to other HE institutions and whether or not students return to HE at a later date. Figures for the cost are not compiled centrally.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will publish the drop-out rates for undergraduates in their first year of study at each UK university in the six most recent years for which figures are available; [56201]

(2) if he will publish the undergraduate drop-out rates for individual courses in each state-funded university in the six most recent years for which figures are available. [56202]

Mr. Mudie: Information on drop-out rates by year of study and individual course at each UK university is not compiled centrally. Measuring drop-out rates is complicated by the non-traditional routes that some students follow and which may include changing courses or institutions, repeating years or leaving HE for a year or more before continuing their studies. But work is currently being undertaken by the funding bodies in the UK to produce progression statistics for each institution. After a period of consultation with individual institutions, this is intended to lead to the publication next year of progression rates which will reflect drop-out and other causes of non-completion.

Children in Care

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress his Department has made in ensuring that children in the care of local authorities receive the same standard of education as other children. [56068]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department is working closely with the Department of Health and statutory and voluntary agencies on a range of measures to improve the education of looked after children and raise the level of their attainments. The Government have announced in the National Priorities Guidance for Health and Social Care targets for the educational attainment of looked after children: that by 2001 at least 50% of children leaving public care should have achieved a GCSE or GNVQ qualification, and by 2003 at least 75% should have done so. The Department is requiring local education authorities to set their own targets in their Education Development Plans, and will expect individual authorities wherever possible to set themselves more challenging targets. In 1999–2000 the Department will be supporting LEA initiatives to improve the education of looked after children through the Standards Fund, and issuing guidance for schools and local authorities on how to increase their educational opportunities and attainments.

Skills Development Fund

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will make an announcement on the make-up of the Skills Development Fund. [55697]

Mr. Mudie: The Secretary of State announced at the TUC Conference on 15 September 1998 a £38 million Regional Development Agency (RDA) Skills Development Fund including the new £5 million Rapid Response Fund to re-train those involved in large scale redundancies. Final guidance on the operation of the full RDA skills package will be issued to RDAs in February 1999.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Environmental Assessments

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action her Department is taking to encourage the (a) World Bank, (b) International Monetary Fund, (c) World Trade Organisation and (d) OECD to require environmental assessments before new funding or policy proposals are approved. [56771]

Clare Short: In our work with the multilateral agencies we advocate the support of national strategies for sustainable development and, as appropriate, promote and monitor the use of rigorous environmental appraisal in their projects and programmes.

The World Bank has long-standing Operational Policies covering environmental assessment of projects to help ensure they are environmentally sound and sustainable. One of the key policy recommendations agreed by donors at the replenishment of the Global Environment Facility (GEF) involves further progress by the World Bank—and other GEF implementing agencies—to integrate global environmental concerns in their country strategies, project design and policy advice. To take this forward the Bank is developing a Corporate Environment Strategy and related sector strategies for Energy, Forest Policy and Transport.

We support the International Monetary Fund aim of promoting high quality growth that is sustainable, results in a permanent reduction in poverty and greater equality of economic opportunity, and that is respectful of the environment.

The World Trade Organisation (WTO) is involved in projects through its technical co-operation funding which are designed to help developing countries (and countries in transition from centrally-planned economies) build capacity to operate successfully in the multilateral trading system. We support this work which aims to help build the necessary institutions and to train officials both on trade policy issues and effective negotiation. Environmental assessments of such activities are of limited relevance.

Trade and environmental policy issues have been a key area of discussion at the WTO. We support the incorporation of environmental concerns into economic policy, including trade. We are working, in close co-operation with the WTO, to help build capacity in developing countries to identify and protect their interests in the trade and environment debate.

The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) does not administer programmes or projects in developing countries. However, its Development Assistance Committee's Working Party on Development Co-operation and Environment has published a range of guidance on environmental appraisal in donor organisations. This is incorporated into internal guidance and applied by bilateral donors, including the Department for International Development (DFID), as appropriate.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum cases were awaiting an appeal hearing (a) on 1 May 1997 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available. [56170]

Mr. Hoon: I have been asked to reply.

On 1 May 1997 there were a total of 23,863 asylum appeals awaiting to be heard of which 23, 556 appeals were at the adjudicator tier and 307 appeals at the tribunal tier. On 1 October 1998 there were a total of 19,195 asylum appeals awaiting to be heard of which 17,802 appeals were at the adjudicator tier and 1,393 appeals at tribunal tier.

Young Offenders

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage remand and convicted (a) young offenders and (b) juveniles in Feltham Young Offenders Unit were from ethnic minorities in the last quarter for which figures are available and each of the previous five years; [56726]

(2) what percentage of remand and convicted (a) young offenders and (b) juveniles in young offender units in England were from ethnic minorities in the last quarter for which figures are available and each of the previous five years. [56725]

Religious Persecution

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the incidence of assaults and other offences motivated by hostility based on the victim's membership of a religious group. [56837]

Mr. Boateng: No research of this type has been commissioned or evaluated.

We will, however, shortly be commissioning research into the nature and extent of religious discrimination in England and Wales. This may reveal information about religious hostility and the forms which it takes.

Mr. Trutch

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Deputy Chief Constable of Hampshire regarding affidavits signed by Mr. Trutch. [56697]

Mr. Boateng: I have not had any discussions with the Deputy Chief Constable about this case. The Hampshire Constabulary has been given advice by the Home Office on how to register its interest with the Royal Court of Dubai in the outcome of the George Atkinson case, to which Mr. Trutch's affidavits are related.

In cases such as this, it would be usual for the police to register their interest with the Dubai Public Prosecutor, initially through Interpol. If the Hampshire Police were to investigate an allegation of perjury, the Crown Prosecution Service might prepare a formal request to the authorities in Dubai for assistance in gathering evidence.

Community Service Orders

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take measures to increase public confidence in community service orders; and if he will make a statement. [56500]

Mr. Boateng: Community service is a very useful sentence. Offenders have to undertake demanding unpaid work for the benefit of the community; and each year about 6 million hours are worked in this way. As well as requiring offenders to make reparation to the community, community service also provides good opportunities for preventing repeat offending and increasing offenders' employability. We therefore want to see greater public awareness and appreciation of the contribution which community service can make to the criminal justice process. Among the measures we have in mind to bring about this aim are:

Better enforcement action by the probation service in the case of offenders who fail to comply with their orders. Prompt and consistent enforcement is a necessary condition for public confidence in all community sentences, and we shall shortly be giving the probation service new guidance on improved performance.

We plan to review National Standards for community service and other community sentences over the coming months, to ensure that they lay down the right expectations for the way in which these sentences are carried out.

We shall be considering, in the light of responses to our consultation document following the Prison/Probation Review, giving community service a new name which will help its purpose and nature to be more widely understood.

Police Pensions

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ensure that the Police Pension Scheme provides a pension for the widow of a policeman who married after retirement from the Police Force but before 6 April 1978 as if the requirement of the Social Security Act 1975 applied prior to that date. [56721]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to do so. To extend retrospective changes to pensioners in the way suggested would be contrary to the principles of a contributory public service pension scheme.

Green Goddesses

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Green Goddess fire appliances there are; what is the age of the (a) oldest and (b) newest; and what plans he has to replace them with modern appliances. [57173]

Mr. George Howarth: There are 1,039 appliances. Their age ranges from 42 years to 45 years. There are no plans to replace them with modern appliances.

Coroners Courts

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform the administration, operation and running of coroners courts; and if he will make a statement. [56565]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 28 October 1998]: The coroner service is a locally provided service. We have no plans to alter local authority responsibilities, although the efficiency and effectiveness of current arrangements are kept under review.

Refugees

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of additional refugees resident and seeking assistance from local authorities in each London borough in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998 to date, divided into (i) single adults, (ii) families and (iii) unaccompanied adults. [56245]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

Figures of asylum seekers supported by London boroughs are supplied to the Department weekly for adults and fortnightly for the other groups. The numbers of asylum seekers supported by London boroughs in the last week of 1997, and for the latest week in 1998 for which figures were provided, are:

PRIME MINISTER

Legislation (Language)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure that all future legislation is written in gender-neutral language. [57193]

The Prime Minister: The most important objectives in the language used in legislation are clarity and legal certainty. In general, the use of gender-specific language is not necessary in order to meet these objectives. But there are occasions when, for example, the use of gender-specific pronouns makes it possible for legislation to be expressed more simply, and so more clearly, than it otherwise could be. In these cases, section 6 of the Interpretation Act 1978 applies. It provides that, unless the contrary intention applies, words importing the masculine gender include the feminine, and vice versa.

Intelligence and Security Committee

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Prime Minister when he will respond to the Intelligence and Security Committee's annual report for 1997–98. [57852]

The Prime Minister: Yesterday I laid the Government response to the Intelligence and Security Committee's report before Parliament.

Tax Harmonisation

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make it his policy to veto any EU proposals regarding the harmonisation of income tax rates; [57124]

(2) if he will make it his policy to veto any EU proposals regarding the introduction of a European income tax. [57125]

The Prime Minister: The Government's firm view is that decisions on the rates and structure of income tax should remain a matter for national Governments. Decisions on European tax issues are subject to unanimity.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals for an EU-wide direct tax were discussed at the EU Council meeting in Portschach; and what his response was. [57199]

The Prime Minister: This was an informal meeting of the Heads at Portschach, in preparation for the full European Council in Vienna, at which a broad range of issues were discussed. No formal decisions were taken.

The Government's firm view is that decisions on the rates and structure of income tax should remain a matter for national Governments. Decisions on European tax issues are subject to unanimity.

EU Expenditure

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals for additional EU expenditure were discussed at the EU Council meeting in Portschach; and what his response was. [57198]

The Prime Minister: This was an informal meeting of Heads, in preparation for the Full European Council in Vienna, at which no decisions were taken and a broad range of issues were discussed.

Ministerial Code

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Prime Minister what recent assessment he has made of the compliance of (a) Ministers and (b) Parliamentary Private Secretaries with paragraph 46 of the Ministerial Code. [57113]

The Prime Minister: With regard to Ministers I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 130.

As paragraphs 44 and 46 of the Ministerial Code make clear, Parliamentary Private Secretaries are not members of the Government, and it is for Ministers to ensure that their Parliamentary Private Secretaries are aware of certain principles which should govern their behaviour in the House of Commons or in any speeches made outside the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Drumcree

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the person photographed on camera entering and leaving the field at Drumcree and shooting at Police lines has been (a) identified, and (b) charged. [55533]

Mr. Ingram: The RUC has not, to date, been able to identify the individual concerned but an investigation into the matter is continuing.

School Enrolments

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the enrolment (a) is this year and (b) was five years ago in each primary, secondary and grammar school in the constituency of Strangford. [56705]

Mr. Paul Murphy: 1998–99 enrolment figures are not yet available.

MacBride Principles

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the (a) states and (b) cities of the United States which introduced legislation seeking to implement the MacBride Principles following representations from Her Majesty's Government not to do so, indicating (i) whether the representations were made (a) in writing and (b) verbally and (ii) whether there was an inquiry where witnesses were subject to cross-examination and in which years; and which states and cities decided not to implement such legislation following representations from Her Majesty's Government. [55632]

Mr. Ingram: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if it is currently the policy of Her Majesty's Government to advise states and cities in the United States against legislating to implement the MacBride Principles. [55631]

Mr. Ingram: Yes, where possible and appropriate. The Government's view is that Fair Employment legislation in Northern Ireland renders unnecessary any reference to the MacBride Principles in legislation in the USA. Furthermore, the way in which the campaign in support of MacBride Principles is conducted could be a disincentive to the investment from the United States needed to reduce unemployment in both communities in Northern Ireland.

Presidential Visit (Costs)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost incurred for Northern Ireland Office staff associated with the recent visit of President Clinton and his wife to Northern Ireland in September 1998. [57127]

Marjorie Mowlam: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

CABINET OFFICE

People's Panel

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he intends to publish results from the People's Panel. [57673]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I am pleased to announce that the People's Panel, made up of 5,000 people from across the UK, has now been set up. The Panel will be used to find out what members of the public think about the services for which they pay. It is further evidence of this Government's commitment to listen to people in framing its policy for improving public services.

I have today placed in the Libraries of the House a copy of the results from the first wave of research conducted with the Panel.

Buying Agency

Mr. Best: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when the next review of the Buying Agency will be conducted. [57737]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have decided that the first stage of the quinquennial review of The Buying Agency (TBA), an evaluation of its performance from 1994 to 1998, should commence immediately. The second stage, the reconsideration of the prior options, is expected to start early next year. The review is expected to be complete by the early summer next year.

Anyone with an interest in TBA and its work who has any comments or suggestions on the Agency's performance should contact David Smith at the Cabinet Office Agencies Unit, Room 206, Ashley House, 2 Monck, Street, London SW1P 2BQ (Tel: 0171 276 2758/Fax: 0171 276 2739) by 8 January 1999.

Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he will publish the latest recruitment statistics for the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration; and if he make a statement. [57733]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Figures showing the statistics for the recruitment campaigns held during 1997 for the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are set out in the table.

	Senior civil service		Band D		Band B		Band A		Total
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
Total	1	—	—	1	1	1	2	5	4	7
White	1	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	3	—
Non-white	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2
Disabled	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
No form returned	—	—	—	1	1	1	—	3	1	5

The Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration is covered by the Civil Service Order in Council 1995 which requires that all departments and agencies should recruit on the principles of fair and open competition and selection on merit in accordance with the Civil Service Commissioners' Recruitment Code. The office ensures that all recruitment is conducted on this basis and that all recruitment is subject to internal audit and review by the Civil Service Commissioners.

The Office is required to report the number of occasions on which the permitted exceptions to fair and open competition and selection on merit were used at each level (except for appointments up to 12 months). The only exception the Office has made is to convert a number of short-term appointments to permanent posts in Bands D and E, where the initial publicity did not state that such appointments could be so converted. This was done as a result of an increase in workloads and organisational changes.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has issued to regional development agencies concerning the implications for them of the proposed Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [56157]

Mr. Meale: None.

Kyoto Agreement

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has held with his US counterpart on the likely date for US ratification of the Kyoto agreement. [56511]

Mr. Meale: My right hon. Friend has had a number of bilateral and multilateral discussions with his US counterpart on the important question of US ratification of the Kyoto Protocol to the Framework Convention on Climate Change.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he expects to implement the de-trunking of the A40 through Cheltenham before improvements are made to the alternative A436 route; and if he will make a statement; [56405]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposals in the trunk roads review on the number of vehicles entering Cheltenham on the A40 from (a) the east and (b) the west; and if he will make a statement. [56404]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As a result of the Roads Review it is proposed to detrunk the whole of the A40 from the M40 westward to Ross-on-Wye. The timing of detrunking will be subject to consultation and agreement with the local highway authorities. The administrative act of detrunking will have no impact on A40 traffic flows through Cheltenham, but Gloucestershire County Council, who will become responsible for the section through the town, will be able to consider measures to reduce the amount of through traffic. They are the highway authority for the A436 and, as such, responsible for determining the need for any improvements to that road.

Repossessions

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with housing groups concerning the levels of repossession cases for (a) mortgage arrears and (b) rent arrears. [56703]

Mr. Raynsford: No recent direct talks have been held with housing groups concerning the level of repossessions. The Council of Mortgage Lenders and the Association of British Insurers have developed proposals for the better protection of home buyers, including improved mortgage payment protection insurance. Groups such as Shelter and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureau were consulted.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals his Department has to amend the laws relating to house repossession to reduce the levels of possession cases for (a) mortgage arrears and (b) rent arrears. [56702]

Mr. Raynsford: None. The Council of Mortgage Lenders and the Association of British Insurers have presented proposals for securing better protection for home buyers by means of improved insurance products, improvements in the way these products are sold, and better integration with state support. Ministers are considering these proposals.

Seat Belts (Buses)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to make the wearing of seat belts by passengers compulsory on all buses. [56457]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department encourages the wearing of seat belts in all vehicles wherever they are fitted. There are no present plans to make the wearing of seat belts by passengers compulsory in all buses (including coaches and larger minibuses) where they are required to be fitted.

At present, unless groups of children are being carried on organised trips, there is no requirement for seat belts to be fitted in the rear seats of minibuses or the unexposed rear seats of coaches. Seat belts for passengers are not required to be fitted in other types of bus, mainly the type used on local bus services. That is because the seats and floors are generally not suitable to be so fitted, or to take the loads that a seat belt would exert in a crash, without major modification.

The law requires that passengers in small minibuses (those with an unladen weight of 2540kg or less) must wear seat belts where they are fitted. However, wearing is not a requirement in larger minibuses and coaches because of problems of enforceability.

Tyneside Metro

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to give formal approval for the extension of the Tyneside metro to Sunderland; and if he will make a statement. [56902]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The application for an Order under the Transport and Works Act 1992 to authorise the Sunderland extension was considered at a public inquiry at the beginning of this year. The Inspector's Report of the inquiry is being considered in the Department and the Secretary of State hopes to announce his decision, on whether the Order should be granted, shortly. Tyne and Wear PTA's application for financial support for the extension is also under active consideration by my Department.

Freight (Shrewsbury to Aberystwyth)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment his Department has made of the potential for increasing the level of freight on the Shrewsbury to Aberystwyth line; and if he will make a statement; [56920]

(2) what has been the level of freight traffic on the Shrewsbury to Aberystwyth line during each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [56919]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand from Railtrack that there has been no freight traffic on the Shrewsbury to Aberystwyth line in the last three years, because of capacity and structural problems. The company also tells me that it has received no expressions of interest from any potential freight customers in a freight service on the line.

The Government have made substantial sums available for freight grants, which are designed to assist companies in moving freight from road to rail. The spend on such grants was doubled to £30 million in our first year in office and the budget for the current year was increased further to £40 million. In launching the Integrated Transport White Paper in July, the Deputy Prime Minister made it clear that still further money would be found for these grants, if there was demand. Nevertheless, it is for the commercial railway interests or freight customers to propose schemes and make application for grants.

Thames Barrier

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what amount of the cost of repairing the damage to the Thames barrier following the incident involving the Sand Kite was met from public funds. [56737]

Ms Glenda Jackson: At present all costs have been met from Environment Agency funds as a settlement has yet to be reached with the Sand Kite's owners. The claim may be subject to a limitation of liability under the Merchant Shipping Act 1995. Legal opinion is currently being sought over whether other options for reclaiming costs exist and negotiations are continuing in order to obtain a satisfactory outcome.

Arco Arun

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will authorise an investigation into the incident involving the dredger Arco Arris; and if he will make a statement. [56734]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I believe my hon. Friend's question relates to the vessel Arco Arun. An investigation into the incident involving the Arco Arun is being undertaken by the Marine Accidents Investigation Branch which will report its findings in due course. The PLA is co-operating fully with the MAIB investigation in addition to conducting its own formal investigation as required by the Pilotage Act 1987.

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the dredger Arco Arris which recently ran aground in the Thames had a qualified river pilot on board at the time. [56735]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I believe my hon. Friend's question relates to the vessel Arco Arun. The Port of London Authority was informed, when the Arco Arun entered the port limits on 13 October, that pilotage was being conducted by a holder of a valid Pilotage Exemption Certificate.

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what amount of the cost of the salvage operation involving the Arco Arris will be met from public funds. [56736]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I believe my hon. Friend's question relates to the vessel Arco Arun. The costs of salvaging the Acro Arun lie with the vessel owners. Should the vessel be abandoned, the PLA has powers under the Port of London Authority Act 1968 to require the vessel to be removed and to recover the full costs from her owners.

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will urge the Port of London Authority to review PLA Pilotage Directive No. 5 following the incident involving the Arco Arris dredger. [56733]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I believe my hon. Friend's question relates to the vessel Arco Arun. I understand that PLA Pilotage Direction No. 5 does not apply to vessels of the type and length of the Arco Arun. We expect all harbour authorities responsible for pilotage to keep their arrangements under regular review.

Construction Exports

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which directorships the head of the Construction Export Promotion and Materials Sponsorship Division holds. [56922]

Mr. Raynsford: The Head of the Construction Export Promotion and Materials Sponsorship Division has been a Non-Executive Director of The Building Centre Group Limited since 21 January 1998. The appointment does not attract any remuneration and was considered and approved in advance by the Department.

The Building Centre is the major permanent exhibition and information centre for the UK building materials industry.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the countries the Minister for London and Construction has led trade missions to since 1 May 1997; which representatives of British industry accompanied him; and what business has been secured as a result. No limit was placed on the number of companies able to participate in these trade missions and every company which expressed an interest in taking part was given the opportunity to do so.

Securing contracts in construction and civil engineering can be a very protracted business and it is rare for orders to flow quickly or solely as a result of contacts made during trade missions overseas. There is no obligation on the part of participating companies to report contracts won or under discussion. However, feedback from the accompanying business representatives has been consistently positive about the value of the information they have gained on markets and particular opportunities and about the number and quality of the business contacts that have been established.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which British companies the Construction Export Promotion and Materials Sponsorship Division has been able to assist with securing orders abroad since 1 May 1997; and if he will list the materials which have been exported as a result. [56932]

Mr. Raynsford: The Construction Export Promotion and Materials Sponsorship Division provides assistance to exporters in a variety of different ways including trade missions, briefing seminars, publications and market reports. Press reports of the Division's activities, such as trade missions, can also be instrumental in alerting companies to particular markets and opportunities. Exporters will use this information alongside that provided by other organisations, such as Overseas Trade Services, to form a view about market opportunities and whether to pursue particular export orders. It is not therefore possible to provide a list of British companies which have been assisted in securing export orders by the Division's activities alone or of the materials which have been exported as a result.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the names of those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 May 1997, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and whether they receive remuneration. [56809]

Mr. Meale: The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House.

Energy Saving

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has evaluated on the role of low-emissivity glass in helping to reduce energy consumption in buildings. [55081]

Mr. Meale: The Department, through the Partners in Technology programme, has sponsored research into the thermal performance of glazing systems. This work has confirmed that low-emissivity glazing, used in conjunction with high performance framing systems, provides the potential for significant energy savings. The Department also monitors research carried out by other bodies including manufacturers, trade associations and universities.

The Department promotes the use of low-emissivity double glazing under the Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme.

Home Improvement Agencies

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses were received to his Department's consultation paper on the funding of home improvement agencies; how many were (i) in favour of the proposal to include funding in revenue support grant without ring fencing and (ii) against; and by how much each local authority will (a) gain and (b) lose at the end of the three-year period if the proposals are implemented. [57308]

Ms Armstrong: We received 202 responses to the consultation paper. 15 respondents fully supported the proposal to include funding in the revenue support grant programme (RSG) without ring fencing, with 184 respondents against.

It is not possible to say precisely how much each local authority would gain or lose after three years if funding was provided through RSG because funds are allocated formulaically on the basis of indices which can change each year. However, the 164 authorities currently in receipt of grant for home improvement agency services would each lose about £10,400 on average. The other 225 authorities would each gain about £11,500 on average.

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has concluded his consideration of responses to the Government's consultation paper on the funding of home improvement agencies; and if he will make a statement. [57732]

Ms Armstrong: Our consultation paper set out proposals for giving local authorities a greater say in decisions on the funding of home improvement agencies, as part of our overall aim of increasing local democracy and improving services for local people. We have received over 200 responses to the paper. The majority expressed support for a greater local say, but a large number of respondents expressed concern about the proposal to transfer resources from specific grants into local authorities' revenue support grant. Respondents were particularly concerned that this could divert resources from authorities who currently choose to support an agency, to those who do not.

In the light of these comments, we have considered very carefully whether there is an alternative mechanism which allows us to achieve our objectives while avoiding these potential problems. We have concluded that, within the present funding framework, the best way ahead is to retain an element of specific central grant, which would be made available only if the local authority agreed to provide funding itself. Subject to the availability of resources, the grant would be paid up to a level which would match the amount provided to the agency by the local authority and its funding partners. In this way, the primary decisions on support for agencies will be taken by local authorities, rather than by central government.

We propose to introduce this 'matched funding' approach without delay. Letters explaining the details of the arrangements and inviting bids for funding for next year will go out to local authorities shortly. In order to give greater certainty to agencies, funding will generally be for three years. Meanwhile we will continue to explore how the funding arrangements might develop in the context of our longer term strategies for improving the local delivery of services to elderly and vulnerable people.

Biodiversity

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plan he has to develop a national strategy for the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity; [57145]

(2) what steps he has taken to encourage the pursuit of the Government's biodiversity objectives on land managed by Government agencies; and what steps he has taken to encourage local authority biodiversity action plans; [57146]

(3) what steps he has taken to encourage biodiversity-friendly business practices. [57147]

Mr. Meale: "Biodiversity: The UK Action Plan" the national strategy for the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity was published in January 1994. This strategy and the UK Biodiversity Steering Group Report published in December 1995 contain the measures aimed at maintaining and enhancing biodiversity within the UK. At the heart of these measures is the development of costed action plans for priority species and habitats. 116 species and 14 habitat action plans were published as part of the Steering Group report and are now being implemented. A further 56 species action plans were published on 2 June. We expect to publish a further 10 habitat action plans in December and a further 256 species and 16 habitat plans early in 1999.

The consultation paper on improving the protection of Sites of Special Scientific Interest, issued on 10 September, sought views on the proposal that we should provide legislative backing for the Government's own commitment to the better management of SSSIs, and to the delivery of biodiversity objectives. We will carefully consider all responses to this proposal.

The Highways Agency provides one example of the delivery of government policies for biodiversity on its network, in partnership with other landowners and wildlife interest groups. Management strategies for landscape management and biodiversity will be developed as current surveys of landscape and ecological elements of the highway estate are completed.

The UK Biodiversity Group and the Local Agenda 21 Steering Group have jointly issued five guidance notes on the preparation of local biodiversity action plans to all local authorities. Case studies on the preparation of such plans are currently being finalised and it is hoped to issue these to all local authorities by the end of the year.

In May the Government co-operated with the UK Round Table on Sustainable Development in launching the booklet "Business and Biodiversity", which explains how businesses can integrate biodiversity into environmental management systems. Some 18,000 copies of the guide have been distributed to date. The guide is a product of a wider report on "Integrating Biodiversity into Management Systems" by the Round Table. The Government have today published a positive response to that report, accepting the thrust of the Round Table's recommendations, particularly those on keeping business abreast of national and local biodiversity work.

The consultation document "Making Biodiversity Happen", published in June as part of the review of the Sustainable Development Strategy, contained a major section on how business might become more involved in biodiversity at local and plant level, as well as nationally. We have received over 360 responses to the consultation document and are currently considering how to feed these into the revision of the Sustainable Development Strategy and the work of the UK Biodiversity Group.

West Midlands (Freight)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has received to improve the shipment of goods from the West Midlands. [57138]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Railtrack has for some time been considering an upgrade of the West Coast Main Line to accommodate "Piggyback" rail freight. The project would be likely to require substantial Government grant. Railtrack has not yet made a grant application.

West Midlands (Public Transport)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has received to improve public transportation in the West Midlands. [57139]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have received a number of proposals for improving public transport in the West Midlands from West Midlands local authorities in their bids for local transport capital finances for 1999–2000.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans to reduce the level of carbon dioxide and other noxious gases in the atmosphere from motor vehicles in the United Kingdom. [57140]

Ms Glenda Jackson: On Monday of this week we published a consultation paper seeking views on policy options to meet our climate change commitments. The paper made it clear that we aim to develop a climate change programme where all sectors, including transport, play a balanced part.

The Government are already pursuing a number of measures which will help to reduce the level of carbon dioxide emissions from new cars and the entire car fleet. In the last Budget on 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1097–112, the Chancellor announced our commitment to the continuation of the fuel duty escalator raising fuel prices by 6 per cent. per annum in real terms, and plans to graduate vehicle excise duty to encourage more fuel efficient cars. These measures will encourage drivers to purchase more fuel efficient vehicles as well as use fuel more efficiently.

We also strongly support the Commission's Strategy on CO_2 from cars which aims to reduce the emissions of CO_2 from new cars sold in the EU to an average of 120 grammes per kilometre, by 2005 or 2010 at the latest. A substantial proportion of this reduction will come from the voluntary agreement which the Commission has recently secured with the car industry. This will reduce the average emissions from new cars sold in the EU by around 25 per cent. by the year 2008.

We have also set up the Cleaner Vehicles Task Force which aims to create a partnership between the Government and the private sector to promote environmentally friendly vehicles which people actually want to drive and buy. The Task Force will encourage the production, marketing and sales of vehicles which are cleaner and more fuel efficient.

The measures contained in the Transport White Paper will also play an important role by delivering a properly integrated transport system for the UK and reducing dependence on the car.

Public Transport (Social Exclusion)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the links between public transport and social exclusion. [56981]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are shortly to commission research into the links between public transport and social exclusion. The research will seek to establish the level of exclusion from public transport, identify the factors which discourage different groups from using it, examine the initiatives to encourage new passengers and propose a range of initiatives to encourage ridership among excluded groups. The results of the research will be available in late 1999.

Limestone Pavement

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to control the extraction and sale of limestone pavement. [56914]

Mr. Meale: Our consultation paper, SSIs—Better Protection and Management, invites comments on options for further protection for limestone pavement. We have also asked the group responsible for the Biodiversity Action Plan for limestone pavement, for information on the extent of trade.

A140 (Suffolk)

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many accidents have occurred on that part of the A140 located in Suffolk since May 1997. [57197]

Number of accidents on the A140 in Suffolk since May 1997 [1]

Accidents

Severity	Number
Fatal	2
Serious	4
Slight	6
All severities	12

[1] Data cover the period between 1 May and 31 December 1997. 1998 data are unavailable

A14 (Suffolk)

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many accidents have occurred on the A14 between Bury St. Edmunds and Stowmarket since May 1997. [57196]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is shown in the table.

Number of accidents on the A14 between Bury St. Edmunds and Stowmarket since May 1997 [1]

Accidents

Fatal	1
Serious	8
Slight	19
All Severities	28

Barnet Football Club

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the inquiry into the future location of Barnet Football Club is due to report. [57114]

Mr. Caborn: Shortly.

London Underground

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish a response to the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee's Seventh Report of this Session on London Underground (HC 715). [57728]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government welcome the Committee's report on our plans for a Public Private Partnership for London Underground (HC 715-I) which has provided a useful input to the discussion on the details of the proposals. We share with the Committee the desire to create a first-class tube service fit to take us into the next millennium. We agree with many of the report's recommendations, and are today publishing our formal response, copies of which will be laid before the House.

Local Authority Housing

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provision he will make for management and maintenance spending on council housing in England for 1999–2000. [57736]

Ms Armstrong: Our proposals are set out in the draft Housing Revenue Account Subsidy and Item 8 determinations for 1999–2000, which we have sent to housing authorities today. Authorities have been invited to let my Department have their views by 4 December 1998.

We expect councils to use the extra resources for housing to give priority to urgently needed repairs. We therefore propose to calculate separate allowances for management and maintenance from next year, in place of the combined allowance used previously in the calculation of subsidy. This will enable us to target additional resources where they are most needed.

We are proposing that maintenance allowances for council houses in England will increase by £52 million next year. This is the first time in four years that maintenance allowances have gone up in real terms.

We want Councils to continue to seek increased efficiency in the management of their housing stock and we are, therefore, also proposing a continued freeze in provision for management of the housing stock.

These increases in maintenance allowances are in addition to the very significant £3.6 billion increases in provision for capital investment in local authority housing announced by the Deputy Prime Minister in July, following the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Our proposals for 1999–2000 anticipate the proposed move to resource accounting within the Housing Revenue Account. Resource accounting will put local authority housing on a more business-like footing, increasing transparency and enabling authorities to make better decisions about the use and maintenance of their housing assets. We expect to consult authorities later this year on detailed proposals for introducing resource accounting from April 2001.

Copies of the draft determinations have been placed in the House Library.

Local Authority Staff

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will repeal the requirement for local authorities to publish their staff numbers locally. [57850]

Ms Armstrong: The Local Government (Publication of Staffing Information) (England) Regulations 1995 require authorities to publish locally each year their staff numbers, in a prescribed format which is based on the figures produced for the Joint Staffing Watch return. The Joint Staffing Watch group has decided that the Joint Staffing Watch return is no longer the most appropriate method of meeting central and local governments' needs for employment information, and the survey is to be discontinued. Trends in aggregate local authority employment will be monitored by inquiries carried out by the Office for National Statistics, which will be less burdensome on authorities. As there are a number of other mechanisms in place for ensuring that local authorities are accountable to their community for the efficient use of resources, I have decided to repeal the Publication of Staffing Information Regulations.

Local Government Reorganisation

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources he will make available to authorities that were reorganised on 1 April 1996, 1997 or 1998 for reorganisation costs incurred by them in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [57854]

Ms Armstrong: On 17 July I invited authorities that have been or are to be reorganised on or before 1 April 1998 to submit estimates of the amount of expenditure they expect to incur on transitional costs of reorganisation in 1998–99. On the basis, inter alia, of the information provided by the authorities, I have decided the revised maximum amounts that it would be appropriate to allocate towards such costs in 1998–99. I have given priority to those authorities that reorganised in 1998.

The amounts allocated are as follows:

Sustainable Development

Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the response to the fourth annual report of the Government Panel on Sustainable Development will be published. [57851]

Mr. Prescott: I am pleased to announce that the Government's response to the Fourth Annual Report of the Government Panel on Sustainable Development has been published today. We have been able to respond positively to many of the Panel's recommendations. The Panel is a valuable source of advice for Government in the achievement of sustainable development. I wish to express my gratitude to the Convenor of the Panel, Sir Crispin Tickell, and his colleagues for their continued commitment to helping to identify new sustainable ways of enhancing the quality of life and prosperity for everyone.

Examples where the Government have been able to respond positively to the Panel's recommendations are:

- on climate change emissions: we have reached an agreement with our EU partners during our UK Presidency on binding targets to meet the Kyoto Protocol target of 8 per cent.
- on marine biodiversity: we have set up a specialist sub-Group to ensure an integrated approach is taken to preserving the diversity of marine eco-systems;
- on endocrine disruptors: we have undertaken a new £3 million research programme to address male reproductive health and the marine environment.
- on building regulations: we have begun a comprehensive review of the existing regulations;
- on economic instruments: we are taking forward the Panel's recommendations in a number of areas.

I am placing copies of the response in the Library.

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government will respond to the report by the UK Round Table on Sustainable Development on Integrating Biodiversity into Management Systems. [57952]

Mr. Meacher: The Government have today published their response to the report by the UK Round Table on Sustainable Development.

The Government response to "Integrating Biodiversity into Management Systems" is positive and accepts the thrust of the Round Table's recommendations. In particular, it welcomes recommendations on keeping business abreast of biodiversity work, nationally and locally; on taking account of biodiversity in the various pollution control regimes, and on giving biodiversity an appropriate weighting in the accreditation of environmental management systems.

I wish to express my gratitude to Sir Richard Southwood and the Round Table for their valuable work in helping to identify new ways to take forward Sustainable Development.

I am placing copies of both the responses in the Library.

Utilities (Diversionary Works)

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has reached a conclusion about the contribution which the utilities pay to public transport operators in connection with diversionary works. [57971]

Dr. Reid: Under the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, and the Street Works (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, undertakers with apparatus in the street are required to meet a proportion of the cost of moving or protecting this apparatus ("diversionary works") in connection with major highway works, major bridge works, and major transport works. These terms are defined in the Act.

These arrangements replaced earlier ones, under which all the costs of diversionary works were charged to the promoter of the scheme giving rise to them.

The Act allows different proportions to be prescribed in different cases or classes of case, but the existing regulations, the Street Works (Sharing of Costs of Works) Regulations 1992 (SI 1991 No. 1690) and the Street Works (Sharing of Costs of Works) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1998 (S.R. 1998 No. 156), prescribe a single proportion of 18 per cent. for all cases.

In discussions while the legislation was being prepared, representatives of the highway authorities and the utilities agreed that an 18 per cent. contribution would be appropriate for diversionary works in relation to road works and bridge works. In terms of the definitions in the Act and Order, these include all major highway works and major bridge works, and those major transport works, which are road or bridge works in nature.

However, the Act, the Order and the regulations go further, by including other forms of transport works, for example new light and heavy railways and street-running tramways. The utilities argue that these are different in kind from road and bridge works and should not be included in the cost-sharing arrangements. Against this, public transport operators maintain that the existing arrangements are appropriate, arguing that their works are akin to highway works and may indeed be an alternative to them.

The Government consider that a distinction should be made in this context between road and bridge works, and other public transport works. The utilities derive an operational benefit from the existence of roads and bridges, because these provide a convenient route for their apparatus. The 18 per cent. contribution might be regarded, at least in part, as a form of rent for this facility. The same consideration does not arise in the case of public transport.

The Government have concluded that a lower rate of contribution would be appropriate for diversionary works in connection with public transport works other than road and bridge works, and has decided that this rate should be 7½ per cent. As a transitional measure, the 18 per cent. rate should continue to apply to any diversionary works in this category which have started on site at the date of this announcement.

Regulations to make the change will be introduced as soon as possible. The contribution in relation to road and bridge works will remain at 18 per cent.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases of benefit fraud have been successfully prosecuted in each month since 1 May 1997. [53110]

Mr. Denham: Tackling fraud and abuse is a top priority for the Government. However, questions on Benefit Agency operational matters are the responsibility of its Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Iain Duncan Smith, dated 31 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of cases of benefit fraud successfully prosecuted in each month since 1st May 1997.

Please find detailed in the attached table a month by month breakdown of the prosecution figures. These figures are totals combining figures from the Benefit Fraud Investigation Service who carry out locally based fraud investigations and the Benefits Agency Security Investigation Service who concentrate on serious attacks on the benefit system by organised criminals.

The Department has always operated a selective cost effective and humane prosecution policy. However, as set out in the green paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future", the Government is committed to removing "no-go areas" where a fraudster might assume that he or she will avoid prosecution. Fraud attracting low overpayment is certainly no guarantee that a fraudster will not be prosecuted.

Administrative penalties are one alternative to prosecution which the BA can now choose to offer in cases involving less serious fraud. We expect the application of this penalty to grow as staff become familiar with its use and we intend to evaluate the effectiveness of this new sanction.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the dates when the ministerial group, established to oversee anti-fraud strategy across central Government and announced in the Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everybody's Business" has met. [57126]

Mr. Denham: The group is to meet shortly. Subsequent meetings will follow as necessary.

Widow's Benefits

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of extending entitlement to widow's benefits to widowers; and if he will make a statement. [55640]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 19 October 1998]: To extend Widow's Benefit to new and existing widowers would generate a gross cost of about £300 million and a net cost of about £250 million once means-tested benefit and tax credit offsets have been taken into account.

Notes:

1. The gross costs have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department and assume that benefits are paid on the basis of the wife's contribution record.

2. Means-tested benefit and tax credit offsets were calculated using the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey and the May 1996 Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry.

3. Estimates are in 1998–99 benefit rates and are rounded to the nearest £50 million, although are not necessarily accurate to that degree.

4. The estimate assumes no behavioural changes.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of new claims which are made for each of the main widow's benefits, and how much would be saved by abolishing each benefit for new claimants only; and if he will make a statement. [55639]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 19 October 1998]: The information is set out in the tables.

The estimated number of new claims for widow's payment and new awards of widow's pension and widowed mother's allowance in 1997–98

Lump sum (claims)
Widow's Payment	45,000
Ongoing weekly benefits (awards)
Widow's Pension	23,000
Widowed Mother's Allowance	7,000

Notes:

1. Widow's Payment information provided by Benefits Agency's Management Information System

2. Ongoing weekly benefit information provided by a 5 per cent. sample taken from the Pensions Strategy Computer System

3. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 1,000

4. Estimates for Widow's Payment relate to claims made; a small number of claims may not be awarded a payment. Estimates for the ongoing weekly benefits relate to actual awards

It is estimated that by 2020–21 annual gross savings of the order shown in the table below would accrue from abolishing Widow's Payment, Widowed Mother's Allowance and Widow's Pension for new claimants.

Lump sum	£ million
Widow's Payment	50
Weekly ongoing benefits
(i) Basic Element:
Widow's Pension	700
Widowed Mother's Allowance	100
(ii) Additional Pension element	150

Notes:

1. Estimates provided by the Government Actuary's Department

2. Estimates are in 1998–99 benefit rates and is rounded to the nearest £50 million. Long term estimates of this kind are uncertain and subject to demographic variation

3. The answer estimates the savings on Widow's Benefits alone; it does not take account of subsequent savings from Retirement Pension paid to widows who were bereaved whilst they were under State Pension Age

4. The estimate takes account of the equalisation of State Pension Age between 2010 and 2020

Pensioner Income

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the level of pensions paid to British citizens retired in other countries. [55801]

Mr. Denham: The Australian Minister for Social Security wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 17 August about this issue. Representations have also been received recently from the Australian High Commissioner, the British Consulate-General in Vancouver, the President of the British Australian Pensioner Association, the Secretary-General of the World Alliance of British Expatriate Pensioners and from pensioners and their organisations.

As there are competing demands and constraints on Social Security spending in the United Kingdom, it would be wrong to raise expectations that uprating UK pensions paid abroad would be likely to attract priority in the current circumstances.

Social Security Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if circular No. 16, issued by the President of the Independent Tribunal Service on 15 September, is compatible with the Government's assurance given on 30 March 1998, Official Report, House of Lords, column 130, that proposed changes to the composition of social security appeal tribunals would be subject to the affirmative procedure; and if he will make a statement. [57231]

Angela Eagle: The Government are committed to improvements in the current arrangements for handling appeals. Current delays, averaging 7 months, are unacceptable. Tribunals whose composition can be tailored to the issues raised on each appeal, are essential if we are to deliver the necessary improvements and reduce delays. The Social Security Act 1998, therefore, provides for tribunals to consist of three, two or one person. We will be bringing regulations to the House early next year for debate under the affirmative resolution procedures.

The Act also contains, at Schedule 6, a transitory power which allows the President of the Independent Tribunal Service to vary the composition of Social Security Appeal Tribunals prior to the introduction of the main changes. The immediate effect of the transitory power was specifically highlighted by my noble Friend, the Lord Advocate when he introduced the provisions to the House of Lords on 20 April 1998, Official Report, House of Lords, column 959. My noble Friend the Lord Advocate went on to explain that the immediate power to introduce flexible tribunal composition had been requested by the President, His Honour Judge Michael Harris, as a means of allowing him the opportunity to test out the proposal prior to full implementation. Circular No.16 allows Incapacity Benefit appeals to be heard by a lawyer supported by a doctor.

The commitment given by my noble Friend the Lord Advocate that changes to the composition of Appeal Tribunals will be subject to affirmative resolution, still stands.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Radio 4

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has made to the Board of Governors of the BBC concerning scheduling revisions at Radio 4 and the ratings of that channel; and if he will make a statement. [56420]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 26 October 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have made no such representations. Responsibility for all matters concerning the editorial content and scheduling of programmes rests with the BBC itself.

New Forest

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food regarding the Ministers Mandate and the Forestry Commission's management of the New Forest in respect of his policy to give the New Forest recognition as a world heritage site. [56502]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has invited the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to comment on his Consultation Paper on a revised Tentative List of UK World Heritage Sites, which included the New Forest, and is currently awaiting its comments.

Royal Parks (Car Parking)

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his Department's policy is in relation to car parking charges within the Royal Parks; and what consultations he has had with the Crown Estate on this matter. [56335]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 27 October 1998]: Parking spaces are made available in the Royal Parks principally for the benefit of people visiting the parks. Where possible these are free, but charges have been made if it appeared necessary to discourage commuter parking.

In 1994, in accordance with this policy, the Royal Parks Agency, which is responsible for managing the Royal Parks on behalf of the Department, introduced pay and display charges for car parking in Hyde Park and Regent's Park. It is proposed to extend these charges to weekends and Bank Holidays in early 1999 in line with this Government's policies on discouraging the use of vehicles in central London, as both parks are well served by public transport.

The Crown Estate was among those organisations which the Agency consulted both over the introduction of charges in 1994 and this year over their extension. Their views, and those of other consultees, have been taken into account in framing the arrangements.

Millennium Commission

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the annual report of the Millennium Commission is to be produced. [57731]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Millennium Commission laid its Annual Report before Parliament earlier today. The Government welcome the report, showing as it does that the Commission continues to exercise good stewardship of Lottery proceeds, whilst delivering real benefits to communities throughout the United Kingdom.

WALES

Optical Fibres

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what ways he attempted to assist the optical fibres plant DIP Flintshire prior to the announcement of redundancies; and if he will make a statement. [56496]

Mr. Hain: The North Wales TEC was in touch with the company prior to the announcement and was able to put the appropriate assistance packages in place to help those that would be affected by redundancy. This has been considered as a large-scale redundancy which enables employees who have lost their jobs to be immediately eligible for Work Based Training for Adults, the New Deal for Employment Service programmes.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the optical fibres industry in Wales. [56495]

Mr. Hain: Despite recent reverses, the prospects for the optical fibres industry in Wales remain very encouraging. The Wales Opto-Electronics Forum, which brings together all the major players in this sector, from both industry and academia, is currently examining ways of building further on their individual and combined strengths.

Supporting the Opto-Electronics industry in Wales is one of the flagship projects in the Wales Regional Technology Plan, which sets out the longer term vision of creating in Wales a culture which encourages and values innovation.

Members of the Opto-Electronics Forum are considering how to establish North East Wales as a Centre of Excellence by developing a cluster of firms in the Opto-Electronic sector.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals his Department and its agencies have to assist the optical fibres (BICC) plant at Deeside Industrial Park; and if he will make a statement. [56491]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Office has approved the North Wales TEC's application that this should be regarded as a large scale redundancy. Those affected by redundancy will therefore be immediately eligible for Work Based Training for Adults, the New Deal and Employment Service programmes. Following the announcement the officials from the WDA and Flintshire County Council met the company and have agreed to take all possible steps to try and assist the workforce in finding alternative employment, with a view also to ensuring that the skills of the workforce can quickly be put to productive use for the benefit of the local economy.

Kimberley-Clark Factory (Deeside)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what ways he assisted the Kimberley-Clark factory on Deeside Industrial Park prior to its announcement on 21 October of closure; and if he will make a statement. [56497]

Mr. Hain: Up to February 1995 the company received financial assistance, under the Regional Development Grant and Regional Selective Assistance schemes, totalling £1.46 million in support of projects to develop and expand production facilities at the Deeside Mill. The WDA has also offered the company assistance in property deal matters.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of manufacturing output in Wales. [56409]

Mr. Hain: Manufacturing output in the year to the first quarter of 1998 was 1.4 per cent. higher than in the previous four quarters; in the UK there was an increase of 1.1 per cent. over the same period.

Flood Damage

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the damage caused by the floods in Wales on 23, 24 and 25 October. [57129]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: At present it is by no means clear how much damage there has been in monetary terms. The Environment Agency, with whom the Department's officials have remained in close contact throughout the event, have estimated there were about 500 houses flooded from main rivers. There were also many properties flooded from other watercourses and by surface water. This event is, of course, not yet over and Environment Agency Flood Control Centres remain open throughout Wales. I have asked the Environment Agency to provide me with a full report.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations requesting aid he has received following the floods in Wales on 23, 24 and 25 October. [57137]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: None at present.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what aid he has given to those suffering damage from the floods in Wales on 23, 24 and 25 October. [57130]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: None. For individuals and most organisations flooding is an insurable risk and it has been the policy of successive Governments that responsibility for their own property is a matter for the individuals and organisations concerned. Local authorities are able to apply to the Government for financial assistance, under the so-called Bellwin scheme, towards expenditure in relation to any uninsurable damage they may have incurred.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Banknotes and Coins

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries show the Queen's head on their currency. [55944]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The following countries show Her Majesty The Queen's head on their currency:

Antigua and Barbuda
Anguilla
Australia
Bahamas
Belize
Britain (including Jersey, Guernsey and Isle of Man) Canada
Dominica
Fiji
Grenada
Kiribati (uses Australian dollars)
Nauru (uses Australian dollars)
New Zealand

Departmental Employees (Physical Difficulties)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people employed by his Department have physical difficulties. [56260]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On 1 April 1998 we employed 106 permanent UK-based people who have declared that they have a disability which will affect them in some way at work. People are not required to report a disability.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral statement of 19 October 1998, Official Report, column 963, what material help Her Majesty's Government are giving to the independent radio station B92 in Belgrade. [56442]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The British Government have helped Radio B92 since 1993. In March of this year we decided to fund the establishment of a dedicated telephone line linking the BBC's Serbian Service to Radio B92. This line is now operational and has enabled Radio B92 and its network of independent radio stations throughout the FRY to increase significantly the re-broadcasting of BBC World Service Programmes. We are currently considering what further assistance we can provide to the independent media in the light of the adoption on 20 October by the Serbian Parliament of a new repressive Information Law designed to restrict their operations severely.

Jammu and Kashmir

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of India to permit foreign journalists and representatives of human rights organisations unrestricted access to Jammu and Kashmir. [56716]

Mr. Fatchett: We have made clear to the Indian Government our commitment to human rights. We shall continue to encourage them to allow more visits by international human rights groups, including Amnesty International and UN thematic mechanisms. We are not aware of any restrictions on visits to Jammu and Kashmir by foreign or other journalists.

Visa Requirements

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visa requirements for persons from Taiwan seeking to enter and work in the United Kingdom; and in which currency they are required to pay for visas in Taiwan before departure. [56706]

Mr. Fatchett: All Taiwan passport holders require a visa to enter and work in the United Kingdom. The requirements will vary according to the type of work. For certain categories of employment, a Work Permit issued by the Department for Education and Employment is also required. Visas are paid for in local currency; in this case the New Tawain Dollar.

Edgar Fernandes Case

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Turkish, Italian and Maltese authorities in respect of the extradition of Mohammed Abdel Mohem Abbas Aly in the Edgar Fernandes case. [56683]

Mr. Fatchett: In September my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State visited Turkey and raised the extradition with the Chief of Police and the head of Interpol in Turkey, in Istanbul and with the Permanent Secretary at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Ankara. The Italian authorities are not involved in the extradition process. The Turkish and Maltese authorities used their Missions in Rome to hand over the extradition papers. The British High Commissioner and Vice-Consul in Valletta take every opportunity to raise the case with their Maltese counterparts. The latest occasion was on 7 October, when the High Commissioner made a formal approach to both the Attorney General and the Permanent Secretary at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to stress the importance we attach to the processing of the extradition request as soon as possible.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the case of Edgar Fernandes. [56682]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the Statement I made during the Adjournment debate on 15 July 1998, Official Report, columns 549–52. Our Missions in Ankara and Valletta continue to press the Turkish and Maltese authorities to expedite the request for the Egyptian suspect's extradition. On 19 October the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Valletta informed our High Commission that they had received the extradition papers from the Turkish authorities on 16 October. The Maltese Attorney General will now consider the extradition request.

Ministerial Visit (Turkey)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, Baroness Symons, had with the Turkish authorities during her trip to Istanbul. [56685]

Mr. Fatchett: During her trip to Turkey from 14 to 16 September, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State met Ambassador Haktanir, the Permanent Secretary at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Ankara. She had wide ranging discussions and raised the case of Edgar Fernandes. She agreed that our High Commission in Valetta would press the Maltese authorities to process the extradition without undue delay. Ambassador Haktanir undertook to monitor the progress of the extradition papers and to chase this as necessary. In Istanbul she met Hasan Ozdemir, the Chief of Police in Istanbul and the Head of Interpol in Turkey, specifically to discuss the case of Edgar Fernandes. Mr. Ozdemir agreed that Turkish Interpol would pursue the paperwork needed to extradite the Egyptian suspect from Malta.

Missing Persons

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to create a unit for missing persons within his Department. [56684]

Mr. Fatchett: Consular Division of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office automatically pass details of inquiries about missing persons to consular offices abroad, where consular staff check their registration records, telephone and last known address and inform the inquirer of the outcome of such research. There are no plans to create a separate unit for missing persons.

Responsibility for searching for missing people rests with the police. Where individuals go missing outside the UK, that responsibility lies with Interpol. We have no investigative powers or resources to trace missing persons. Consular Division advises inquirers to register the person as missing with their local police force, who will work with Interpol to establish their whereabouts.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has instructed Consular Division to check with those reporting missing persons whether they have turned up three months after they make the original inquiry.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when (a) the British Embassy in Santiago and (b) his Department were informed by the Chilean authorities of the intended visit of Senator Pinochet to the United Kingdom; and what information about Senator Pinochet's intended visit, and when, his Department communicated to the Home Office. [56695]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 27 October 1998]: In early September the embassy in Santiago was told informally of a proposed visit by Senator Pinochet to the UK. On 16 September the Chilean embassy made a routine request to the Foreign Office for the use of VIP facilities at Heathrow for Senator Pinochet's arrival. Senator Pinochet came on a private visit. As a Chilean citizen he did not need a visa to enter the UK. We do not as a matter of routine communicate information relating to VIP facilities to the Home Office and did not do so on this occasion.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department provided VIP facilities for Senator Pinochet's visit to the UK in October 1997; and if he will make a statement. [57233]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on 27 October 1998, Official Report, columns 146–47.

Amnesty International

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members of Amnesty International are planned to be seconded to his Department; when they will commence working with Ministers; and by whom they will be paid. [57234]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Ms Harriet Ware-Austin from Amnesty International will commence work with the Human Rights Policy Department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in December of this year. The costs of this attachment and that of Dan Seymour from Save the Children Fund will be met from the FCO'S Human Rights Project Fund.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from Amnesty International concerning (a) China and (b) Argentina. [57235]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Amnesty International, and other NGOs, briefed senior officials on their concerns about human rights in China in advance of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's recent visit. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister raised the issue of human rights in his discussions with the Chinese leadership, and we continue to address these concerns through our bilateral and EU human rights dialogues with China. We liaise closely with Amnesty on these issues and Amnesty have participated in the dialogue process.

We have received periodic reports from Amnesty International on their "Urgent Action" appeals in Argentina—as elsewhere. Amnesty International have not approached the Foreign Office recently with specific questions about Argentina. But we are happy to receive Amnesty representatives, if they have any particular points to discuss.

Diplomatic Posts and Embassies

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the diplomatic posts and embassies which are being examined for potential closure; and when he plans to announce his conclusions. [57237]

Mr. Fatchett: We are considering several options to modernise our overseas network. This includes looking for opportunities for growth in areas of the world where Britain is under-represented. No decisions have yet been taken on closing any posts to release resources for redeployment elsewhere.

British Business (Emerging Markets)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the 20 principal emerging markets for British business. [57285]

Mr. Fatchett: Decisions on emerging markets for individual companies will be the responsibility of individual companies. In 1997, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department for Trade and Industry published the report of the Export Forum, which set out criteria for selecting priority markets for the work of the DTI, and UK Posts overseas.

Falkland Islands

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy not to enter into negotiations with the Argentinian President and his delegation over the status of the Falklands; and if he will make a statement. [57115]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have no doubt about our sovereignty over the Falklands. This is not negotiable. There will be no change in the status of the Islands unless that is the wish of the Islanders themselves. In inviting President Menem we have made it clear to the Argentines that his visit will not be an opportunity to negotiate sovereignty over the Falklands.

Overseas Estate

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the British Government owned buildings and estates held abroad and the latest estimate of their value. [57238]

Mr. Fatchett: The information requested, in respect of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's overseas estate, which comprises some 3,900 properties, is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. 50 per cent. of our office and residential accommodation overseas is freehold. The provisional market value of the overseas estate in 1997 was £936.5 million.

Further information on the Department's estate can be found in pages 71–72 of the FCOs Departmental report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Consul-General, New York

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the newspapers and journals in which he plans to place advertisements for the post of British Consul-General in New York. [57236]

Mr. Fatchett: The position of Director General of Trade and Investment US and Consul-General New York was advertised in The Sunday Times on 11 October, "The Voice/Weekly Journal" on 12 October, Ethnic Media Group (consisting of the "Asian Times", "Caribbean Times", "New Nation" and "Eastern Eye") on 13 October, the Financial Times on 14 October, The Times on 15 October and The Economist on 16 October. It also appeared on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office web-site.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for November; and if he will list the major European Union events for the next six months. [57730]

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Strategic Export Controls

9. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what responses he has received to the consultation on the strategic export controls White Paper. [55060]

Mrs. Roche: Since the White Paper on Strategic Export Controls was published on 1 July, the Department has received 52 responses from representatives of industry, non-governmental organisations and other interested organisations and individuals.

We are currently considering all the responses carefully as part of the process of further developing the proposals contained in the White Paper.

Science Base

14. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the contribution of the science base to the UK economy as a whole. [55067]

Mr. Mandelson: The strength of Britain's science base is absolutely fundamental to the success of the UK economy. I plan to publish soon a Competitiveness White Paper which will demonstrate how the use and application of science is helping companies meet the challenges of the knowledge driven economy.

The UK's future success depends crucially on a partnership between the science base and the commercial sector. Most importantly, it depends on the well-trained, skilled people produced by and working in our scientific centres.

Post Office

15. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the future of the Post Office. [55068]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have received representations from a wide range of interested parties, including management and unions of the Post Office, the Post Office Users National Council and the National Federation of Sub-Postmasters. My officials have also received written views and, amongst others, met representatives of business users and distribution companies.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has held with Post Office trade unions relating to the structure and funding of the Post Office. [55075]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I maintain regular dialogue with the unions. They have been contributing fully to the work of the Review of the Post Office and are maintaining contact with the Review Team and the working groups, which are considering all aspects of the future of the Post Office, including its structure and funding.

Aerospace Industries

16. Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of the restructuring of the aerospace industries. [55069]

Mr. Wilson: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made clear since his statement on this subject with the German and French Heads of Government on 9 December last year, there is an urgent need to restructure the aerospace and defence industries in Europe.

Although it is for industry to develop specific restructuring plans, we have undertaken to facilitate any sensible restructuring proposals as far as practicable.

European Assistance (Berwick-upon-Tweed)

17. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what forms of European assistance will be available to the Berwick-upon-Tweed area following the closure by Pringle of Scotland's factory there. [55070]

Mrs. Roche: There are four types of potential funding sources which could be accessed to finance a strategy for the economic regeneration of the Borough, from which over £2.5 million is currently available in the Berwick sub-region.

Government Policy Co-ordination

18. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent meetings he has had with the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in respect of the co-ordination of Government policy on (a) the minimum wage and (b) fairness at work legislation. [55071]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Ministers regularly meet the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to discuss the co-ordination of Government policy.

Energy Market (Regulation)

19. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in achieving a fair system of regulation in the energy market. [55072]

Dr. Howells: We have made good progress. Following the publication of the Green Paper on Utility Regulation in March, we published a response to consultation in July which set out a series of commitments to improve regulation of all the privatised utilities, including gas and electricity. The Government intend to place the regulators under a new primary duty to protect the interests of consumers and to create new independent statutory Consumer Councils. We also intend a number of specific reforms in relation to energy regulation. These include the separate licensing of electricity supply and distribution, which will lead to greater competition in the electricity market, and the merger of Offer and Ofgas. Indeed on the last point, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently announced the appointment of Callum McCarthy as the new combined gas and electricity regulator. We have recently published consultation papers on the detail of these and other changes, and will bring forward our proposals taking account of responses received.

Manufacturing and Construction (London)

20. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the Government's priorities for promoting manufacturing and construction in London. [55073]

Mrs. Roche: The Government's priorities in London, as elsewhere, are to help companies improve their competitiveness and innovate through the delivery of high quality business support services and initiatives.

Fairness At Work

21. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the Fairness at Work White Paper. [55074]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Department has received 474 responses, reflecting a wide range of views, to the White Paper on Fairness at Work, published on 21 May. I have placed a list of respondents in the Library of the House.

Competitiveness UK Initiative

22. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent assessment he has made of his Department's Competitiveness UK initiative. [55076]

Mr. Mandelson: The initiative produced a number of good ideas for promoting competitiveness which I will include in the White Paper on competitiveness later this year.

Parcelforce

23. Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to make a decision on the future of Parcelforce. [55077]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The future status of Parcelforce is being considered in the context of the Government's Review of the Post Office. The Government hope to announce their proposals shortly.

Electricity Pricing

24. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the changes to be made to the setting of the pool price for electricity. [55078]

Mr. Battle: Recognising the inadequacies in the existing trading arrangements in October last year I asked the Director General of Electricity Supply (DGES) to look into the case for reforming them. The Government believe there is a need to build an electricity market which plays a full role in facilitating competition which people understand and trust and which is responsive to customer demands.

In July of this year the DGES identified that there are significant problems with the existing pool arrangements and made proposals for new electricity trading arrangements which would effectively replace the Pool with arrangements similar to those used in other commodity markets. I have asked for work to be put in hand to develop and implement new trading arrangements using these proposals as the starting point.

Science, Engineering and Technology

26. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to promote the use of science, engineering and technology across Government. [55080]

Mr. Mandelson: The effective use of science, engineering and technology is one of my key priorities. The Government have already allocated an additional £1.4 billion over the next three years, including £0.4 billion from the Wellcome Trust, to restore the excellence of the Science and Engineering Base. The forthcoming Competitiveness White Paper will demonstrate that science is fundamental to helping UK companies address the challenges of the knowledge-driven economy.

Within Government we will seek to ensure that policy and regulation are always based on the best available scientific evidence. Lord Sainsbury and I will be working with Ministers in other Government Departments both to make sure the Chief Scientific Advisor's Guidelines on the use of scientific advice in policy making are fully and rigorously implemented and to improve public confidence in the Government's use of scientific advice.

Exchange Rate

28. Mr.Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the impact of current levels of sterling on manufacturing companies seeking to export goods. [55084]

Mr. Wilson: I have had a number of representations from manufacturing exporters about the strength of sterling.

Interest Rates

29. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of current interest rates upon the manufacturing sector. [55087]

Mr. Battle: The Government recognise that the level of the pound and, more recently, the impact of financial difficulties in Asia, have been causing problems for exporters and manufacturers. However, the Government's economic policy framework will create long-term economic stability and ensure that we do not return to the boom and bust cycles which have done so much damage to the United Kingdom's manufacturing sector in the past.

31. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effects of current levels of interest rates on the profitability of Britain's industry. [55089]

Mr. Battle: The Government's economic policy framework will promote long-term economic stability, and break with the cycle of boom and bust, and so establish the conditions for the long-term profitability of British industry.

Clothing and Textile Industry

30. Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the clothing and textile industry on the prospects for the industry. [55088]

Mr. Battle: During the course of the year, DTI Ministers have received a number of letters about the position of the industry from companies, MPs, trade unions and trade associations. In addition, DTI Ministers have met with representatives from the textile and clothing industry and the unions.

Part-time Workers Directive

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he is making on the implementation of the EC directive on part-time working. [55079]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We intend to take powers as soon as Parliamentary time permits to implement the Directive and to ensure equal pay for part-time workers. The Directive will be fully implemented by the April 2000 deadline and we will aim to ensure the provisions are in place in good time for employers and employees to know the provisions and make arrangements.

Information Technology

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to promote information technology on a local basis. [55082]

Mrs. Roche: This Government's aim is to ensure that the UK is recognised as a global leader in the Information Age. We therefore believe it is crucial that we encourage greater awareness and use of information and communication technologies (ICTS) by both business and individuals in the UK. Provision of advice on ICTs to small businesses at a local level is a core activity in the Department's Information Society Initiative (ISI) Programme for Business. This advice is provided by a UK wide network of local support centres which are based on Business Links and equivalent organisations in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The IT for All initiative aims to raise awareness amongst the public of the benefits new technologies can bring in everyday life. About 3,000 local sites are currently listed on our database.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of grant his Department is paying to the RSA in 1998–99; and what plans he has for 1999–2000. [55853]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 22 October 1998]: The RSA budget for 1998–99 is £130 million. The Comprehensive Spending Review has set DTI's overall budget for the next three financial years. However, no decision has yet been taken on the allocations to individual programmes for 1999–2000.

Unimerco

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what factors he took into account when deciding to provide a grant to Unimerco; what assessment he made of its effect on British competitor companies; and if he will make a statement. [56560]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 28 October 1998]: The application for Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) from Unimerco Ltd. was appraised against the criteria of that scheme which covers employment, viability, industrial and regional considerations, UK net benefit and need for assistance. Those criteria were fully satisfied. As part of the RSA appraisal process, advice was provided by the Department's market specialists on the wider industrial background to the application and the company's marketing plan. The application was also considered by the West Midlands Industrial Development Board which brought a commercial perspective to the decision making process and paid close attention to the value of the project for both the regional and national economy. An offer of grant was made when the Department was convinced that the project would result in net benefits to the UK economy and that assistance was necessary for the project to go ahead.

Chile

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement on the promotion of British exports to Chile; [56568]

(2) what measures he is taking to maximise United Kingdom trade with Chile. [56569]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 28 October 1998]: The full range of Government overseas trade services are available for Chile. This includes support for trade missions and trade fairs. Chile is included in an on-going programme of promotional events on Latin America. My Department also has an Export promoter, seconded from the private sector, promoting opportunities in Chile.

Regional Development

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the financial impact per capita of the population of the removal of Objective 5b funding in the North West region. [56913]

Mrs. Roche: The Northern Uplands Objective 5b 1994–99 programme, covering parts of the North West, North East and Yorkshire, covers a population of 0.374 million people and 118 million ecu (in 1999 prices) over the six years.

It is not possible at this stage to estimate the impact of any potential changes to coverage until negotiations are completed on transitional arrangements and the Commission's broader rural development proposals.

European Space Agency

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the United Kingdom Government will participate in the forthcoming European Space Agency Future Launcher Programme. [55384]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 28 October 1998]: The United Kingdom's participation in the European Space Agency's Future Launcher Technologies Programme will be considered when the likely benefits and costs to the United Kingdom have been assessed by the British National Space Centre with the help of the United Kingdom space industry.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the capacity of British industry to contribute to the European Space Agency Future Launcher Programme. [55385]

Mr. Battle: The British National Space Centre has asked the United Kingdom space industry for its views on the European Space Agency's proposed Future Launcher Technologies Programme and will assess the capacity of British industry to contribute to the programme in light of the industry's response.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the basis of his calculation of the jobs impact of the minimum wage. [55085]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 23 June 1998, Official Report, column 473.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet representatives of manufacturing industry to discuss the competitiveness of manufacturing industry. [55051]

Mr. Mandelson: I meet representatives of manufacturing frequently to discuss competitive issues. I am pleased, for example, to be attending the "Made in Sheffield" dinner tonight.

Small and Medium Enterprises

Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what priorities he has identified for his Department in respect of assistance for small and medium businesses. [55083]

Mrs. Roche: The Government's single most important priority is to create and sustain a sound economic framework in which small firms can develop and grow.

Specific priorities are to address barriers to SMEs, such as obtaining finance, inappropriate regulatory burdens and accessing business support.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his oral answer of 21 October 1998, Official Report, column 1287, if he will estimate the year on year cost of the Working Time Directive to the Rover Group. [56520]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 26 October 1998]: No specific estimate has been made of the costs to individual sectors or companies. An assessment of costs for the whole of British industry is held in the Library of the House.

Any cost of implementing the Regulations needs to be compared with the benefits of helping to combat stress and absenteeism by ensuring workers receive proper rest and so reducing costs to industry. The CBI estimate up to £25 billion was lost in 1996 due to absenteeism. The London School of Economics also estimates that current staff turnover levels cost employers up to £1.8 billion.

Trade (Burma)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department's Asia-Pacific Advisory Group currently promotes trade with Burma. [56933]

Mr. Wilson: No.

HEALTH

Antibiotics

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what views the United Kingdom representative at the Copenhagen Conference of EU Chief Medical Officers in September expressed concerning the use of antibiotics as growth promoters. [56168]

Ms Jowell: The Department did not send a formal representative to the conference but funded the attendance of officials and experts. The Deputy Chief Medical Officer, Dr. Jeremy Metters, chaired one of the preceding workshops on "elements of good practice in the use of antimicrobial agents". The conclusion of this workshop was that the use of antibiotics as growth promoters should be phased out. A preliminary report on the conclusions and recommendations emerging from the conference is available, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Mental Health Care Groups

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to create discrete mental health care groups within area health authorities. [56212]

Ms Jowell: None. We need to remove the "Berlin Wall" between health and social care in order to provide the most effective support for people with mental illness rather than create new barriers. That is why we issued, on 16 September 1998, a discussion document "Partnership In Action—New Opportunities for Joint Working between Health and Social Services" setting out our proposals to enable authorities to work better together.

Dentistry

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount of funds allocated to Investing in Dentistry up to 30 September; which health authority areas have applied for funds to date; how much each bid for; and how many applications have been successful in each health authority area. [56489]

Mr. Milburn: Since the Investing in Dentistry initiative was announced in September 1997, grants totalling £6,161,352 have been approved. The table gives details of the health authorities that submitted Investing in Dentistry funding requests to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in 1997–98 and 1998–99 to date, the gross amount of funding requested and the number of applications approved.

Agency Nurses (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many agency nurses have been employed at NHS hospitals in the Greater London area during the last 12 months; and what was the cost of this employment. [56719]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service Executive does not record the numbers of agency nurses employed in NHS hospitals. The latest available figures show that in 1996–97, £108.8 million was spent employing agency nurses in NHS hospital trusts in Greater London.

Carers

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many carers are themselves minors in (a) Staffordshire, (b) the West Midlands and (c) England; and what proportions such figures represent of (i) all carers and (ii) all minors in the latest year for which figures are available. [56660]

Ms Jowell: In 1996, the Office for National Statistics published results of the first national study based on a sample of young carers taken from the general population. Copies of this report "Young carers and their families" are available in the Library.

It was estimated from the research that there were 32,000 young carers in Great Britain aged 8 to 17, representing 0.5 per cent. of the population in this age range. Estimates for England and by region are not available.

The 1995 General Household Survey estimated that the number of informal carers in Great Britain aged 16 and over was 5.7 million.

Nurse Training

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what requirements are placed on employers of nurses to provide time and pay for continuation training; what action is taken to ensure that nurses do not have to fund their own continuation training nor undertake it in their own time; and by what means he monitors the performance of employers in respect of continuation training of nurses. [56436]

Mr. Milburn: The level of investment in the continuing professional development of National Health Service staff is a matter for employers. We expect them to have personal development plans in place for the majority of professional staff by April 2000. We shall be considering the need for any other measures in the light of the response to our consultation document; "A First Class Service".

Clinical Psychologists

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many clinical psychologists are employed in the NHS in grades (a) assistant psychologist, (b) trainee psychologist, (c) grade A psychologist and (d) grade B psychologist; [56506]

(2) what is the current age distribution of clinical psychologists; [56448]

(3) if he will list the number of clinical psychologists at each spinal point of their wage scale; [56447]

(4) how many clinical psychologists currently work in the NHS. [56445]

Mr. Milburn: There are 3,800 clinical psychologists (whole time equivalents) working in the National Health Service. It is not possible to say how many were employed in each grade or spine point because information is now broken down into the five categories shown in the table (manager, scientist, scientific officer, technician and student/trainee).

Abortion Costs (Barnet)

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost of a first trimester abortion by vacuum aspiration in the Barnet Health Authority in 1997. [56903]

Ms Jowell: The average cost of a first trimester abortion by vacuum aspiration in the Barnet Health Authority in 1997 was £300 for a day case episode.

Childbirth Costs (Barnet)

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost of childbirth in the Barnet Health Authority in 1997, including the cost of ante-natal and post-natal care. [56898]

Ms Jowell: The average cost of childbirth in the Barnet Health Authority in 1997, including the cost of ante-natal and post-natal care is approximately £2,000.

Young People (Housing and Social Services)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve housing and social services provision for 16 and 17 year olds who are no longer able to remain in the parental home and who are not in paid employment. [56453]

Ms Jowell: We are looking at ways in which local authorities can make better and more effective provision for looked after children who are leaving care. We will set out our proposals when we publish our responses to the Children's Safeguards Review.

Training

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many associate specialists appointed in each of the last five years have had their training accredited; and what proportion of those entering ENT clinics have had their training accredited. [57162]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not held centrally.

Sight Tests

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost of offering free sight tests to all people of Afro-Caribbean origin resident in the United Kingdom who are currently not exempt from payment. [57224]

Mr. Milburn: Assuming that the same proportion of Afro-Caribbean residents are eligible for free National Health Service sight tests as in the population as a whole and they have their sight tested at the same frequency, about £3 million per annum.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the relative risk of contracting new variant CJD from (a) cross-contamination between patients from hospital surgical instruments used in tonsillectomies and appendectomies and (b) eating beef on the bone. [57200]

Ms Jowell: After careful consideration of the case in which the abnormal prion protein associated with new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (nvCJD) was detected in the appendix of a patient who had subsequently died of the disease, the Joint Working Group of the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens (ACDP) and the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) concluded that given all the circumstances surrounding the use of surgical instruments the risk to other patients was minimal.

SEAC has subsequently reviewed the implications of this incident for the risks generally of transmission of nvCJD through surgical instruments. The Committee concluded that because so little is known about the infective agent further studies were needed before a definitive assessment of risk could be undertaken.

Our decision to ban the sale of beef on the bone was taken in the light of advice from SEAC and taking account of the views of the Chief Medical Officer. This advice, together with the Government's response, is published, and copies are available in the Library.

The very limited information about risks in either case means that it is not possible to make any meaningful comparison of the risk of contracting nvCJD through contaminated surgical instruments and eating beef on the bone.

Autism

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children below the age of five years were diagnosed as being autistic in each year since 1970. [56975]

Mr. Hutton: Information about the number of children below the age of five years diagnosed as being autistic is not held centrally. It is for the local statutory authorities to determine the needs of children with autism in their area and work together effectively to ensure that these needs are met.

Sudden Death Syndrome

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received from (a) organisations and (b) hon. Members regarding Sudden Death Syndrome. [57136]

Mr. Hutton: Ministers have received twenty-eight letters about sudden death syndrome, almost all of which were from, or on behalf of, representatives of the organisation Cardiac Risk in the Young. Of these, 20 were from hon. Members and the remaining eight were from members of the public.

Most of the representations received pressed for wider recognition of the impact made by sudden death, particularly in the young, and included requests for consideration of funding under the Section 64 scheme.

Cardiac Disease (Young People)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department is supporting into the treatment of cardiac disease in otherwise healthy young people. [57134]

Mr. Hutton: The Department funds a comprehensive programme of research and development into the treatment and prevention of heart disease, though nothing specifically on treatment for this group of people.

The Medical Research Council, which is funded by the Office of Science and Technology, commissions most of the Government's research into clinical issues. The Council is always open to new sound scientific proposals, in competition with other applications.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of (a) the number of NHS trusts which provide MRI scanning and (b) the number of trusts which use private companies to provide that service. [57117]

Mr. Hutton: No statistics are held centrally on the provision of Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI) scanning services in the National Health Service. However we estimate that MRI services are provided by approximately 150 NHS trusts and approximately 50 privately owned scanners are used by NHS patients.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of NHS trusts planning to provide new MRI services over the next five years; and, of these, how many intend to use private companies to provide that service. [57116]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not held centrally.

Professions Allied to Medicine

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of people working in professions allied to medicine who have left the NHS over the past five years; and what proportion of the total NHS workforce in those professions this figure represents. [57118]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is not collected centrally. I refer my hon. Friend to the 15th Report on Professions Allied to Medicine issued by the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine (January 1998) for statistics about the number of Professions Allied to Medicine leaving the National Health Service; copies are available in the Library.

Pain Killers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has evaluated into the relative effectiveness of (a) dextropropoxphene used in combination with paracetamol and (b) paracetamol alone in acute pain relief. [56543]

Ms Jowell: All applications for marketing authorisations to place a medicinal product on the market must be supported by data showing the safety, quality and efficacy of the product. The Medicines Control Agency assesses this data and permits a product to be placed on the market only if it is satisfied that the data submitted by the applicant prove the safety, quality and efficacy of the product. The Medicines Control Agency does not, however, make any assessment of comparative efficacy of any medicinal product.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Countryside Stewardship

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of applications for management agreements under the countryside stewardship scheme were rejected in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998 to date. [56549]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 October 1998]: In 1996, 2,584 Countryside Stewardship applications were received and 1,135 agreements offered (43.9 per cent); in 1997, 2,217 applications were received and 1,197 agreements were offered (54 per cent.); and, in 1998, 2,444 applications were received and we plan to offer approximately 1,344 agreements (55 per cent.). The approved applications were those which offered best value for money; the rejected applications include those which were ineligible.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the implications of budget reductions on the countryside stewardship agri-environment scheme. [56667]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 October 1998]: The Countryside Stewardship budget has increased annually, enabling new agreements with a first year cost of £5.9 million in 1997 and £6.5 million this year to be approved.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is presently being taken by his Department to promote countryside stewardship in Dorset. [56665]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 October 1998]: The Ministry is consulting interested local organisations and statutory bodies to identify the priorities for the scheme for the coming year. We will also clarify the scale of funding available and thus the number of applications it would be reasonable to consider.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how much of his Department's budget has been allocated to the countryside stewardship agri-environment scheme in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999; [56666]

(2) what plans he has to increase the budget allocation to the countryside stewardship agri-environment scheme. [56668]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 October 1998]: The financial provision for the Countryside Stewardship scheme for payments to agreement holders in 1998/99 is £21.2 m. The budget for the scheme in 1999/2000 is still under consideration but it will be an increase on this year.

Piers

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy for the protection of seaside resort piers and esplanades from coastal erosion. [55707]

Mr. Morley: The Government's policy aims to reduce the risks to people and the developed and natural environment from flooding and coastal erosion by encouraging the provision of adequate and technically, environmentally and economically sound and sustainable defences. Local authority proposals for coast protection capital works which protect seaside resort piers and esplanades or where piers or esplanades contribute to coastal defence may be considered for approval under the Coast Protection Act 1949 and for funding assistance.

Recycling

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of paper used by his Department is recycled. [55721]

Mr. Morley: All the paper used by this department is either recycled or made from sustainable managed forests and is elemental chlorine free and made without the use of chlorine gas. According to the suppliers, about 1 per cent. of the paper provided during 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998 was recycled.

Flood Defences

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the Environment Agency's regional flood defence business plans for the South West; and if he will make a statement. [55719]

Mr. Morley: I am aware that the Environment Agency has put together a business plan which sets out options for the programme of flood defence work that needs to be done in the South West region. The Government set the strategy but a Government assessment of such plans would in practice amount to another level of approval and undermine the proper responsibility of the Agency. I shall be writing to the Chairmen of all Regional Flood Defence Committees about strategic flood defence priorities in the wake of the Report by the Independent Review Team on the flooding that occurred at Easter this year, and the business plan will need to take account of that.

Supermarket Produce

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the volume of produce wasted annually as a result of rejection by supermarkets solely on grounds of appearance; and if he will make a statement. [56350]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 October 1998]: I have made no such assessment. These are matters for resolution between supermarkets and their suppliers and customers.

Organic Farming

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) of 2 April 1998, Official Report, columns 655–56, what progress has been made in identifying the implications for organic farmers of cross contamination with pollen from genetically modified crops. [56357]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 October 1998]: The research referred to is to be conducted by the John Innes Centre in conjunction with Elm Farm Research Centre. A contract for this work is expected to be finalised in the near future. The work is expected to take 5 months and the results will then be considered by MAFF and the United Kingdom Register of Organic Food Standards (UKROFS).

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Cash Limit

Dr. Vis: To ask the Attorney-General what changes he proposes for the Crown Prosecution Service's cash and running costs limits for 1998–99. [58160]

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class VIII Vote 4 will be increased by £8,253,000 from £220,673,000 to £228,926,000 and the gross running costs limit for Class VIII Vote 4 will be increased by £4,153,000 from £216,767,000 to £220,920,000.

The cash limit increase of £8,253,000 includes funding to meet the transitional costs of the internal reforms set out in the Glidewell report "The Review of the Crown Prosecution Service", published in June 1998 (Cm 3960).

It also provides for further rationalisation of the department's estate and the implementation of a number of criminal justice initiatives including those arising from the Crime and Disorder Act 1998.

The increases will be offset by a transfer of £1,153,000 from the Home Office, the take up of £1,800,000 of the department's end year flexibility of £3,400,000, as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36, and a charge of £5,300,000 to the Reserve. It will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October 1998. [58000]

Clare Short: Shortly.

Female Genital Mutilation

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the Government's policy on working to eradicate the practice of female genital mutilation in developing countries. [57534]

Clare Short: Female genital mutilation is both a health and a human rights issue. It contravenes several United Nations Conventions. The Government's policy is to try to persuade countries where the practice occurs to take steps to reduce and eventually eliminate it. Most Governments oppose it, and welcome assistance from donor partners to change attitudes within their countries. In other cases, we try to exert influence through quiet diplomacy and by providing support to strengthen laws against harmful traditional practices. Supporting efforts to help women exercise their human rights is a key part of the Department for International Development's (DFID) strategy.

At the 1998 session of the UN Commission on Human Rights the UK co-sponsored a resolution—"The elimination of violence against women"—which called upon states to eradicate traditional or customary practices, particularly female genital mutilation, that are harmful or discriminate against women, through the development and implementation of national legislation and policies prohibiting such practices, the prosecution of perpetrators, awareness-raising programmes, education and training.

Care for the consequences of female genital mutilation in poorer countries is extremely limited. Many complications go untreated. We are seeking to help in three main ways:

by ensuring wide awareness of the issue;

by funding research;

by supporting activities and projects designed to change behaviour in the long term; for example, we finance local and regional workshops to identify priorities at field level to which donors can respond.

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which young girls' and women's health projects have included education on female genital mutilation in each year since the endorsement of the 1994 Cairo Plan of Action by the UK Government; which NGOs have carried out those projects and in which countries; and what was the total amount of funding for these projects in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [57535]

Clare Short: This information could not be fully collected in the time available. I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy in the Library of this House.

Russia

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid and assistance the United Kingdom has given to the Russian people following their recent currency crises. [57929]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development continues to provide bilateral technical assistance to Russia via the Know-How Fund. This extends across a range of economic and social sectors. We also continue to contribute via various multilateral agencies, in particular the EU/Tacis programme. In addition, we are monitoring carefully the need for humanitarian assistance this winter. With our G7 partners we are encouraging the Russian Government to adopt appropriate economic policies to allow a resumption of IMF and other financial flows.

Sudan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's current relationship with the Government of Sudan with regard to aid projects. [57765]

Clare Short: We do not provide aid through Government of Sudan channels. Our bilateral development programme was terminated in 1991. Our substantial programme of humanitarian assistance, £34 million since January including our share of EC assistance, is channelled through UN agencies and international non-government organisations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross. Some small project grants are provided direct to local grass roots organisations.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what provision has been made in her Department's budget in the financial years (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02 as a result of the privatisation of the Commonwealth Development Corporation. [57612]

Clare Short: Some of the anticipated proceeds from the sale of CDC were taken into account in the provision agreed for the aid programme in the Comprehensive Spending Review announced in July. The precise level of proceeds received from the sale will depend on the prevailing market conditions. It would not be appropriate for market and commercial sensitivity reasons to give estimates of likely proceeds.

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of her Department's budget will be made available to UK-based non-governmental organisations, in (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–01 and (d) 2001–02. [57610]

Clare Short: In 1998–99 about 6 per cent. of the Department's bilateral aid programme budget will be channelled directly through non-governmental (NGOs) and civil society organisations by means of the Joint Funding Scheme and support for Voluntary Service Overseas. NGOs are also contracted by the Department for International Development (DFID) to deliver projects within country programmes; these arrangements are handled within regional programme budgets, and it is not possible to give a total figure.

DFID's annual resource allocation exercise, which is now under-way will determine future allocations within the aid programme. The outcome of this exercise will be reported in the Departmental Report in April 1999.

Partnerships

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the countries referred to in paragraph 16.5 of the Comprehensive Spending Review (Cm 4011) in which she currently considers that (a) her Department is able to involve itself in a partnership to eradicate poverty; and (b) those where it is not possible to involve the host Government in an effective partnership. [57611]

Clare Short: The White Paper on international development which we published a year ago set out this Government's plans for helping to reduce world poverty by working in partnership with poor countries which are themselves committed to poverty reduction.

It is not helpful and would be simplistic to try to list countries with which partnership may or may not be possible. We provide an analysis of progress in each country where we have a significant programme within the framework of the country strategy process. Completed country strategy papers are publicly available. They outline in detail our view of the prospects for development and partnerships.

Health Education

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals the Government have to increase investment in family planning and sexual and reproductive health to match the planned increases in the overseas aid budget. [57194]

Clare Short: We wish to pursue focused investment and action that contributes directly to poor countries' attainment of the international development goals. Strengthening health systems' capacity to meet basic needs—including reproductive health needs—will be a priority theme for new expenditure.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what priority the Government give to adolescent sexual health education and services within its human development targets set out in the White Paper, Eliminating World Poverty. [57195]

Clare Short: The White Paper sets out our intention to help ensure that all people, whether younger or older, are able to access and benefit from sexual and reproductive health care information and services. We know that young people are particularly vulnerable to sexual infection and dangers associated with pregnancy. Our approach will increasingly emphasise and respond to their needs.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Fuel Tax

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect on car usage arising from the fuel tax escalator. [56728]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The fuel duty escalator will have some impact in reducing vehicle mileage but its main purpose is to reduce fuel consumption and hence carbon dioxide emissions, the main greenhouse gas. By 2010, overall fuel duty increases from 1997 to 2002 under the escalator of on average at least 6 per cent. real increases in fuel duty each year are estimated to result in carbon dioxide savings of between 2 and 5 million tonnes of carbon and traffic reduction of around 12 billion kilometres, most of which arises from reduced car use.

Cell Powered Vehicles

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is taking to prepare for the introduction of fuel cell powered vehicles. [56730]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have a number of programmes to encourage the production and use of fuel cell vehicles, such as the Department of Trade and Industry's Advanced Fuel Cell and Foresight Vehicle programmes. In addition, we are encouraging local authorities and business to look at cleaner vehicles and fuels in order to help to meet our environmental objectives, including the national air quality strategy objectives. Further support for the introduction of fuel cell powered vehicles, for example, support for new fuel infrastructure, would depend upon how the technology and the market develop and which fuel or fuels emerge as the main fuel source for fuel cell vehicles.

Dual Carriageways

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of miles of dual carriageway road per unit area for each county. [56742]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information required for this question will be placed in the Library of the House.

Area Cost Adjustment (Hertfordshire)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contribution the area cost adjustment made to the amount of standard spending assessment which Hertfordshire received in respect of (a) all services, (b) education, (c) police and (d) personal social services in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) 1997–98. [56836]

Ms Armstrong: A table showing these figures for each local authority in Hertfordshire has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress with transport provision for visitors to the Millennium Dome. [56921]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Good progress is being made on all aspects of the transport arrangements for the Dome. In particular, the Government welcome London Transport's recent appointment of Bechtel to manage the completion and commissioning stages of the Jubilee Line Extension. It is now planned to open the new line in three stages: first, from its eastern terminus at Stratford to the Dome at North Greenwich by the late Spring of next year, adding the next section through to Waterloo by late Summer and the final section through to Green Park by late Autumn, which will still be in good time for the opening of the Millennium Experience at the turn of the year.

City Cruises which will be providing river boat services from central London has placed orders for four new boats. The contract to build the new pier at the Dome has been let. London Central has been selected to operate the Millennium Transit bus service between Charlton railway station and the Dome via the Millennium Village. Railtrack is planning to improve the station and Greenwich will improve the road to provide a new bus turnaround facility. Part of the journey to the Dome will be over a segregated busway which it is proposed will incorporate electronic guidance.

Waterways

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action the Government are taking to encourage more freight to be transported on United Kingdom inland waterways. [56429]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are keen to encourage greater use of inland waterways, where that is a practical and economic option. The Department currently gives Freight Facilities Grants for inland waterways schemes where freight would otherwise have gone by road. The Department will be re-examining the rules of the scheme to try to encourage more applications for inland waterways. The budget for the Freight Facilities Grant was increased this year by one third to £40 million.

In addition the Department—as stated in the Government's White Paper "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone"—is working to update planning guidance on transport which will encourage more freight to be carried by water. Local authorities in their development plans will be expected to consider opportunities for new development which are served by waterways; and to give better protection to sites and routes, both existing and potential, which could be critical in developing infrastructure to widen transport choices, including water transport.

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action the Government are taking to encourage more leisure and tourism activities on United Kingdom inland waterways. [56430]

Mr. Meale: The Government believe the waterways are a substantial asset and have an important role in a number of areas such as leisure and tourism, heritage, amenity, conservation, regeneration and transport. We want to raise the profile of the waterways and increase their potential. We intend to publish in the next few months an inland waterways policy paper.

It is estimated that over 10 million people visit the waterways each year, representing a total of over 280 million informal visits. Within these figures there are: 1.6 million private pleasure boaters, 350,000 holiday hire boaters, 1.5 million pleasure trip boaters and 4.6 million angler visits. The inland waterways generate an estimated £10 million each year in water-related tourism expenditure, and £2.78 million in hire boat expenditure. It is estimated that 63,000 people are employed in water related jobs.

The Government-sponsored British Tourist Authority (BTA) is actively promoting the waterways of Britain and Ireland. The campaign, involving partnerships with the main waterway industry operators, local authorities and National Tourist Boards, is promoted through most of BTA's 46 overseas offices. BTA's brochure 'Waterway Britain and Ireland' presents waterway travel as an alternative, sustainable way of touring the British Isles.

The day-to-day management and operation of the inland waterway network rest with British Waterways, the Environment Agency, the Broads Authority and a range of other public and private bodies. The three main navigation authorities work closely with BTA, regional and national tourist boards and with the private sector to promote leisure and tourism opportunities on their respective waterways.

The Association of Inland Navigation Authorities, which represents around 30 authorities, is finalising a strategy for the inland navigations of the United Kingdom.

This will include objectives for the navigation authorities to meet in relation to developing tourism and leisure opportunities on the waterways network.

The Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council is undertaking a report to demonstrate ways in which the waterways in West Yorkshire can be developed for tourism, leisure and community use.

Railway Crossings

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the statutory consultation requirements and the statutory safety requirements that need to be put in place before a railway foot crossing can be transferred from manned to unmanned status. [57073]

Ms Glenda Jackson: If a railway authority proposes changing a railway foot crossing to unstaffed status, it must request the Secretary of State to make an Order (which would specify the necessary safety arrangements) authorising the change in status, and notify each local authority in whose area the crossing is situated of the proposed change, allowing not less than two months for those authorities to make representations to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State must take account of any representations received before deciding whether or not to make the Order.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations Railtrack has made to him about its involvement in the Channel Tunnel Rail link project. [57190]

Dr. Reid: Following the announcement in the House on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–70, by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister of revised arrangements for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link, officials have had intensive discussions with Railtrack and other parties involved in the CTRL so as to conclude the various agreements which flow from the June announcement.

Housing Ballots

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will reassess his policy on housing ballots in the light of the CitySide HARCA and Poplar II HARCA ballots; and if he will make a statement. [57040]

Mr. Raynsford: Under Schedule 3A to the Housing Act 1985 (as inserted by section 6 of and Schedule 1 to the Housing and Planning Act 1986) the Secretary of State shall not give his consent to a proposed housing stock transfer if it appears to him that a majority of the tenants do not wish the transfer to proceed.

The local authority seeking consent will accordingly need to demonstrate that it has carried out adequate consultation and provide evidence of tenants' views. Although a ballot is not a statutory requirement, we believe that a properly conducted formal ballot is probably the best way in which an authority can satisfactorily demonstrate that a majority of tenants are not opposed to the transfer.

Poplar II HARCA (Tower Hamlets)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has received a formal bid from the London Borough of Tower Hamlets in respect of the Poplar II HARCA. [57041]

Mr. Raynsford: The London Borough of Tower Hamlets made a bid for a grant for the Poplar II transfer under Round 2 of the Estates Renewal Challenge Fund in December 1996. Funding for the scheme was approved in February 1997. A formal application for consent to transfer was submitted on 27 October 1998.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what changes he plans to make in the membership of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee. [57099]

Mr. Meacher: The new membership of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee will be announced shortly. The composition of the new Committee will be in line with the membership template set out in the reply given to the hon. Member for Northampton, South (Mr. Clarke) on 16 July 1998, Official Report, columns 243–44.

A11

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give a breakdown of the timescale for the dualling of the A11 from the Fiveways Roundabout Great Barlow to Thetford. [57068]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government's review of the roads programme, "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England", confirmed that, although work on this scheme was not sufficiently advanced for inclusion in the Targeted Programme of Improvements, preparatory work would continue.

Further programming of work on schemes following the roads review is currently being considered.

Railway Services

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the average lateness of those Great Western trains which are categorised as late in the most recent statistics produced by OPRAF. [57078]

Ms Glenda Jackson: OPRAF's figures show what proportion of Great Western trains arrive at their final destination more than 9 minutes 59 seconds late. This is a general indicator of their overall performance, although we know that some services may be much later than this. Great Western is subject to an incentive regime which penalises it £250 if trains are 20 minutes late, £500 if 30 minutes late or partially cancelled (e.g. terminating short of final destination); and £1,000 if a service is cancelled entirely. Details of payments under this system appear in OPRAF's quarterly performance bulletins. It is not possible to provide performance data in more detail than in the Bulletin because of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will revise the framework for penalties on Railtrack for under-performance; and if he will make a statement. [57685]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The incentive regime which operates between train operators and Railtrack, and which gives Railtrack the incentive to provide effective and reliable infrastructure, is part of the track access contracts under which operators gain access to the infrastructure. The charges and penalties which apply under those contracts were set by the Rail Regulator in 1996 for a period of five years; they are being reviewed by him and new charges will be set from 2001.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the (a) number and (b) percentage of train delays and cancellations due to (i) failures attributable to the train operating companies and (ii) failures attributable to Railtrack, for the last 12 months for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [57688]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The industry makes use of information relating to the attribution of responsibility for delays and cancellations between the operator of the service, other operators using the network, and Railtrack. This information is required to drive incentive payments regimes which operate between the parties, to incentivise each to avoid causing disruption and delay. It is commercially confidential.

Bus Fuel Rebate Scheme

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will extend the bus fuel rebate scheme to vehicles involved in non-profit making community transport schemes. [57191]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The long-standing purpose of the bus fuel duty rebate scheme is to assist services which (among other criteria) are available for the general public and are registered with the Traffic Commissioner as local bus services. We have no present plans to extend the scheme's scope.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the procedure of westerly preference for incoming flights to Heathrow Airport. [57417]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House on 24 July 1998, Official Report, column 1413, in which I said that we intend to invite views on modifying the operation of westerly preference at Heathrow at night in the second-stage consultation paper on night restrictions, to be issued shortly. There are no plans to review its use during the day.

Retail Stores

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many superstores and supermarkets of the single storey uncompartmentalised warehouse type of (a) over 2,000 square metres and (b) over 4,000 square metres were built in (i) 1990 to 1995, (ii) 1996, (iii) 1997 and (iv) 1998 to date. [57674]

Mr. Raynsford: The information in the form requested is not available; however the number of shops and restaurants in England and Wales with a floorspace of over 500m^2 was published in the 'Commercial and Industrial Floorspace Statistics 1995'. The survey showed that, for the year 1994, the total number of hereditaments by this description was 24,100.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to repeal the present legislation in respect of compulsory competitive tendering; and what plans he has to introduce best value for local authority service delivery. [57677]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government are committed to introducing a new duty of best value for local authority functions, and abolishing compulsory competitive tendering (CCT), as soon as Parliamentary time is available. I cannot pre-empt the Queen's speech on the substance of the legislative programme for the next session of Parliament. Ahead of primary legislation, we have established a programme of best value pilot projects and we have relaxed existing CCT regulations to encourage all local authorities to adopt best value practices now.

Barnet Football Stadium

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will publish the correspondence and notes of meetings between the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale), Ministers of the Crown, civil servants and Government agencies relating to the Barnet football stadium planning application; [57539]

(2) what correspondence written by the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) about the Barnet football stadium planning application was put before the planning inquiry inspector; and who submitted the correspondence to the inspector. [57540]

Mr. Caborn: No. Because the inspector has not yet reported to the Secretary of State, the hon. Member should approach the inspector through the chief planning inspector. There were no meetings. The Government Office for London put the correspondence before the inspector.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which (a) Ministers of his Department and (b) parliamentary private secretaries (i) have seen papers and (ii) were present at meetings, concerning the impact of the Barnet football stadium (1) on traffic on the M1 and A1 within the M25 area and (2) on the local environment. [57558]

Mr. Caborn: A Departmental submission was seen by me, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and my hon. Friends the Minister for London and Construction and the Minister for Transport in London. Parliamentary private secretaries did not see it.

There were no meetings. The submission dealt with the possible traffic and environmental consequences of the development.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on those Government departments or agencies which were consulted with regard to the Barnet football stadium planning application; and which Government departments or agencies made representations to the public inquiry. [57560]

Mr. Caborn: Local planning authorities are under a duty to consult certain statutory consultees on planning applications made to them and they include some government agencies. When considering whether to call in this case, we did not consult on the matter. At the inquiry representations were made by the Highways Agency, the Environment Agency and London Transport.

Planning Applications

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) has made to (a) Ministers and (b) officials of his Department on planning applications outside his constituency area since 1 May 1997; and if he will identify the nature of each application. [57559]

Mr. Caborn: My Department has received representations from my hon. Friend on three planning issues outside his constituency. One relates to the development of Barnet Football Club, one to the Belmont Riding Centre in Barnet and the third was made on behalf of his constituents concerned about proposed limestone quarrying at Nettleworth Farm, Boon Hills Farm, and Williamwood Farm in the neighbouring constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton).

Home Improvement Agencies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the impact of proposals to cease earmarked funding of home improvement agencies in favour of an adjustment to the revenue support grant. [57634]

Ms Armstrong: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 29 October 1998, Official Report, column 254, to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Burgon), about the impact of the proposals on local authorities in our recent consultation paper on the funding of home improvement agencies; and to my reply of 29 October 1998, Official Report, column 255, to my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Ms Moran) announcing our decision on this.

Urban Task Force

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what changes there have been to the membership of the Urban Task Force since its establishment. [58096]

Mr. Caborn [Pursuant to his reply, 29 April 1998, c. 128]: I would like to announce a change to the membership of the Urban Task Force. Stuart Lipton, Chief Executive of Stanhope Property Developments, has stepped down to an advisory role due to time pressures. He has been replaced by Phil Kirby, the Head of British Gas Properties, who was previously a member of one of the Task Force's three Working Groups.

Anthony Mayer, Chief Executive of the Housing Corporation, has been appointed Vice-Chairman of the Task Force.

Integrated Transport White Paper

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to paragraph 1.28 of the Government's White Paper "A New Deal for Transport", by what means he intends to put greater emphasis on listening to transport users. [57686]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have learnt a lot about people's attitudes to transport and its impacts on the environment and the economy through surveys such as the British Social Attitudes survey carried out by Social and Community Planning Research. We intend to build on this through further surveys, consultation and research projects and by encouraging Rail User Consultative Committees, the National Federation of Bus Users and the London Regional Passenger Committee to contribute fully to the Government's objective to improve services for passengers. My Department will be issuing a number of documents over the next few months, seeking views on specific policy measures raised in the Transport White Paper. The new Commission for Integrated Transport will bring together all interested parties, including transport users, to make recommendations to Ministers, and at the local level, local authorities will be consulting widely with local people, businesses, transport operators and community groups when drawing up their local transport plans.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to paragraph 1.43 of the Government's White Paper "A New Deal For Transport", what is the value of freight grants committed in the year 1997–98; what is his latest estimate of the value of freight grants in each subsequent year for which figures are available; and when he plans to extend freight grants. [57691]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1997–98 we doubled the freight grants budget to £30 million and this was substantially taken up. We have increased the funds available in 1998–99 to £40 million and to date £32 million of this has already been committed. Still further funds will be made available for an increase in the freight grants budget in future years, if there is a demand.

We intend to bring forward legislation to extend the freight grants regime to include coastal and short sea shipping once a consultation on the details of the scheme has been carried out and a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to paragraph 1.21 of the Government's White Paper "A New Deal For Transport", if he will establish targets for (a) investment in public transport and (b) the increased number of people using public transport over the next five years, broken down by transport mode. [57690]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Increased investment in public transport, involving public and private sectors, is an essential part of our integrated transport strategy. As well as our plans for Government expenditure on public transport announced following completion of the Comprehensive Spending Review, new public-private partnership will lead to substantial additional investment in transport infrastructure. We will also give local authorities powers to introduce congestion charging and workplace parking levies, which will produce guaranteed streams of new funding for investment in transport improvements locally.

Local authorities will be required, as part of their local transport plans starting next year, to set targets on transport indicators looking five years ahead. It will be for local authorities to determine which targets to set, but these are likely in many cases to include targets for the increased use of buses and rail. Building on that, the Government will be asking the Commission for Integrated Transport to provide advice on the setting of national transport targets, including for public transport use.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to paragraph 1.36 of the White Paper on the future of transport, what plans he has to set noise standards for (a) motorways, (b) trunk roads, (c) other urban roads and (d) other rural roads; and if it is his intention that money should be spent on existing roads to make them quieter. [57687]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As the White Paper explains, the European Commission has proposed a framework Directive on environmental noise to harmonise methods of calculating noise exposure so that targets and action plans could be developed, initially by Member States but eventually at EU level. It would be premature for us to consider the possibility of setting noise standards until this work is further advanced.

In "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England" we announced that in future, whenever a trunk road needs to be resurfaced, and where noise is a particular concern, we shall ensure that the most appropriate noise reducing surfaces are used. In addition to this, we intend to establish new criteria for providing noise mitigation for serious noise problems on existing trunk roads and a ring-fenced annual budget for this work. We will make a further announcement about this in due course.

Rights of Way

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent assessment he has made of the damage being caused to ancient pathways and rights of way; and what recent representations he has received on this subject. [57827]

Mr. Meale: My Department keeps no records of damage to ancient pathways or rights of way. Highway authorities are responsible for ensuring that rights of way are kept in good order.

We receive about 3 representations each month from members of the public and interested organisations about damaged caused to public rights of way.

Sellafield

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has received from the Environment Agency draft determinations of applications by BNFL for variations to some of the radioactive discharge authorisations at Sellafield and to allow the mox plant there to come into operation. [58022]

Mr. Meacher: Draft determinations on these applications were delivered to my Department today. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library. Members of the public who wish to obtain copies of the documents can do so by contacting the Environment Agency.

Requests have been made to Ministers to call in the applications for their own determination. These requests are being considered carefully and my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will announce their decisions as soon as they are able to do so.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October. [57997]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Shortly.

Policy Proposals (Quality of Life)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what methods of measurements and from what base lines his Department employs in assessing the quality of life implications of policy proposals; and how these were selected. [55767]

Mr. Meale: DETR uses a range of measures to assess policy and other proposals, which include economic, social and environmental indicators consistent with relevant guidance from HM Treasury and other Government Departments. Quality of life relates indirectly to these measures and may depend on a range of factors. In the context of DETR's policy areas, relevant examples are the quality of housing, accessibility considerations with respect to transport services, the health impacts of air quality, and the concept of amenity, which has several applications.

Housing (Young People)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what improvements he is planning to housing provision for 16 and 17 year-olds who are no longer able to live in the parental home and who are not in paid employment. [57555]

Mr. Raynsford: The Code of Guidance on Allocation of Housing Accommodation and Homelessness is currently under revision and will provide more advice to help local housing authorities develop effective strategies to assist single homeless people including young people. The guidance will make clear that careleavers with very few exceptions should be regarded as "vulnerable" and considered under the homelessness legislation. Homeless 16 and 17 year olds who have no back-up support should also normally be regarded as vulnerable. In addition, housing authorities will also be advised that they should consult social services departments on the position of 16 and 17 year olds, with their consent. I hope local authorities will make good use of this guidance.

We have also established the Youth Homelessness Action Partnership to bring together senior representatives of central government, local government and the voluntary sector. The Partnership's key tasks are to: produce an agreed definition of youth homelessness; and estimate the numbers involved; identify what works in tackling and preventing youth homelessness; and disseminate good practice to all the key players. The Partnership will also contribute towards the evaluation of the impact of Government policies on youth homelessness. The work of the Partnership will be underpinned by research to be commissioned by my Department later this year.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce a decision on the PFI bid for the improvement scheme for the A130; and if he will make a statement. [57492]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are considering the Essex County Council proposals for the A130 at the moment. We will announce a decision when we have reached conclusions about the project.

Regional Airports

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those countries which (a) have agreed, (b) have failed to agree and (c) have not responded to his statement of 10 June 1998, Official Report, column 580, on multilateral agreements on 3rd and 4th freedoms at regional airports. [57520]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Of the 74 bilateral partners to whom open access to regional airports has been offered 11 have accepted it. The 11 are:

Bahrain, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Fiji, Jamaica, Jordan, South Korea, Malaysia, Pakistan, Qatar and Turkmenistan.

The regional access offer has been rejected by 12 bilateral partners. These are:

Armenia, Brazil, Egypt, Indonesia, Kazakhstan, Malawi, Moldova, Mongolia, Myanmar (Burma), Saudi Arabia, the Seychelles, and Yemen.

The following countries have not yet responded to the offer:

Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Belarus, Botswana, Brunei, Chile, Congo, Côte d'voire, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Gabon, Georgia, Ghana, Hungary, India, Iran, Israel, Japan, Kuwait, Kyrghyzstan, Lebanon, the Maldives, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, the Philippines, Russian Federation, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syria, Tanzania, Thailand, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, Vietnam, Zambia, and Zimbabwe.

In addition, holding replies or requests for further information or for discussion of the offer at air services talks have been received from Australia, Hong Kong SAR, Kenya, Namibia, and Oman.

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the new international routes to regional airports that have been agreed consequent upon the Minister's statement on the liberalisation of access to regional airports on 10 June. [57532]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The only new routes to UK regional airports which have so far been agreed as a result of the regional access offer announced on 10 June are routes between UK regional airports and Jamaica. The air services arrangements with the other ten countries who have accepted the regional access offer already allowed carriers to serve regional points in the UK, but only with limited capacity. Those capacity limits have now either been removed, or will be removed once formal amendments to the air services arrangements have been made.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

North-West Airports

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate the number of overseas visitors to Britain who arrived through North-West airports in 1998 to date. [57177]

Janet Anderson: The International Passenger Survey estimates that 626,000 overseas visitors to Britain arrived through Manchester airport in the first eight months of 1998. The total number of overseas visitors to the United Kingdom in the year to date is 17,290,000, of which 3.6 per cent. were arrivals through Manchester airport. It is estimated that the vast majority of visitors from abroad arriving in the UK through North-West airports do so through Manchester airport.

Cinemas

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many towns in the United Kingdom with populations of over 100,000 do not have a cinema. [57291]

Janet Anderson: My Department does not compile information of this type. However, a recent report by the European Audiovisual Observatory indicated that in 1996 there were 742 cinema sites in the UK with 2,166 screens.

Premiership Football

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Office of Fair Trading regarding the Restrictive Practices Court inquiry into the televising of Premiership football being held in January 1999. [57111]

Janet Anderson: Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State nor other Ministers at the Department for Culture, Media and Sport have discussed this matter with the Director General of Fair Trading.

Stadium Safety

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what assessment he has made of the effect which the Football Trust's moratorium on grant aid to league football clubs will have on their ability to meet the required standards for safe terracing by the August 1999 deadline; [57157]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of the reduction in the percentage of the cost of stadium development which the Football Trust will contribute on the ability of football clubs to meet the required standards for safe terracing by the August 1999 deadline. [57158]

Mr. Banks: The Government are committed to meeting the August 1999 deadline for safe-terracing at lower division clubs. One of our first acts in office was to announce a £55 million funding package for the Football Trust. This new funding arrangement includes £35 million to help clubs to meet Taylor-related costs, and involves money from the Lottery and Premier League. These funds are in addition to revenues raised through the Reduction in Pool Betting Duty. The distribution of these funds is a matter for the Football Trust. The Football Trust will treat each application on its own merits, subject to the discretion of its Trustees.

Landmark Millennium Projects

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what responsibilities the Millennium Commission has to report to Parliament on landmark millennium projects; and what reports it has made to date; [57108]

(2) what plans he has to account to Parliament in respect of the landmark millennium projects. [57110]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Millennium Commission laid its Annual Report and Accounts before Parliament, on 29 October 1998 and has done so every year since its establishment in 1994. The report includes information on capital projects, including those known as landmark projects. As Secretary of State I answer Parliamentary Questions on Millennium Commission business; and both the Director of the Commission and I, as its Chairman, are answerable for its performance before Committees of the House.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will make a statement on progress with each of the landmark millennium projects; [57109]

(2) which organisations are responsible for continuing costs after 2001 for each of the landmark millennium projects. [57107]

Mr. Chris Smith: These are matters for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of my reply in the Library of the House.

Department Reviews

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list (a) each review announced by his Department since 1 May 1997, (b) the date of its commencement, (c) the date or proposed date of its conclusion and (d) the date, or expected date of his response in each case. [57307]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The reviews announced by the Department since 1 May 1997 are shown in the table:

Youth Music Trust

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how many representations his Department has received from schools and colleges concerning funding by the Youth Music Trust; [57206]

(2) how many applications for funding have been received by the Youth Music Trust; and what is their aggregate value; [57207]

(3) how many meetings of the Youth Music Trust have taken place. [57208]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The Youth Music Trust has yet to be formally constituted as a legal entity. My Department is currently supporting the Chairman-designate, Gavin Henderson, to bring this about. The Trustees-designate have no legal status until the Trust is established, but they are being kept informed of progress, and it is expected that they will shortly meet informally.

The Department receives a steady stream of representations from a range of bodies and individuals generally interested in the Trust, including a small number of approaches for funding from schools, colleges and others.

BSkyB (Manchester United)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has made to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry regarding BSkyB's offer for Manchester United. [57215]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The Government will look very carefully at any competition and public interest issues which may arise from the proposed takeover of Manchester United by BSkyB. By long standing convention, summarised in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information Second Edition (1997), advice and consultation within Government is not disclosed. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is due to announce his decision shortly as to whether the proposed takeover should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many meetings he has had with the task force set up to find alternatives to tobacco sponsorship of sporting events. [57209]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The EU Tobacco Directive provides up to three years for domestic legislation to be implemented, and a further two years for the ban on sports sponsorship by tobacco companies to be enforced. Up to a further three years may be allowed in exceptional circumstances for existing sponsorship of events organised at a global level, provided sponsorship levels and associated advertising are reduced. It is against this timescale that the Task Force will work. I will chair the Task Force to help all sports in receipt of tobacco sponsorship to identify alternative sponsors.

The Task Force has not yet been formally constituted, although I have had an initial informal meeting with sports and business interests and will hold a further meeting later this year when the current exercise to collect sponsorship information from the sports concerned should be completed.

"News At Ten"

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has made to the ITC concerning the proposal to reschedule "News at Ten". [57212]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 29 October 1998]: I have made no representations to the ITC in relation to their current consideration of proposals from the Channel 3 companies to revise the weekday evening schedule, including replacing the current news bulletins with programmes at 6.30pm and 11pm. I set out my own views on this issue in a letter to my right hon. Friend the Chairman of the Culture, Media and Sport Select Committee on 5 October as I was aware the Committee was likely to want to conduct an inquiry on this issue which it has subsequently done. As the ITC were then in the process of public consultation on the Channel 3 proposal, my letter was copied, as a matter of courtesy, to Sir Robin Biggam and also to Richard Eyre, Chief Executive of the ITV Network.

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the amount of money in (a) nominal and (b) real terms which will be available to the New Opportunities Fund in each year from 1998 to 2005. [57204]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 29 October 1998]: We are currently discussing with the distributing bodies how to adjust their percentage shares so as to provide the New Opportunities Fund (NOF) with an additional £400 million by the end of the present licence period. Until these discussions have taken place, the annual income assumptions for the NOF cannot be finalised. Beyond 2001, the distributors in the arts, sports, heritage and charities have each been guaranteed 16.67 per cent. of Lottery revenues and, once the Millennium stream comes to an end, the NOF's share will rise to 33.33 per cent.

Digital Terrestrial Programming

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Independent Television Commission about the limits under the Broadcasting Acts on the provision of digital terrestrial programming; and if he will make a statement. [57972]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Independent Television Commission has had a number of discussions with my officials outlining their concerns over the practical impact of those provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1990 (as amended by the Broadcasting Act 1996) which seek to ensure plurality in the provision of programme services to the digital terrestrial television platform during its early years. Following these representations, I am issuing today a consultation paper seeking views on proposals to use my order-making power to amend the current limits in the Broadcasting Act.

My proposals will continue to ensure plurality and diversity in the provision of programme services on digital terrestrial television but will alter the limits to which the statutory transitional arrangements apply. The proposed changes will reflect the current practicalities of the launch of digital terrestrial television and ensure that it is not impeded simply due to statutory provisions drawn up on the basis of estimates made two years ago of the number of programme services that would be available at the launch of digital terrestrial television.

I am placing copies of the consultation paper in the libraries of both Houses.

Departmental Headquarters

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many days he spent at his Department's headquarters in (a) August, (b) September and (c) October. [57203]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 29 October 1998]: I spent a total of 31 days in my Department's headquarters between August and October 1998. These are divided as follows:

(a) August: 5

(b) September: 10

(c) October: 16.

Public Appointments

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the remunerated appointments to non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department, together with the level of remuneration in each case. [57216]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The information requested is in the following table.

Cash Limits

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what changes he proposes to make to his Department's cash limits and running costs limits for 1998–99. [58095]

Mr. Chris Smith: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class X, Vote 1 will be increased by £7,029,000 from £878,787,000 to £885,816,000 and the gross running costs limit increased by £2,243,000 from £28,721,000 to £30,964,000.

This is to provide for increases in provision of £1,700,000 for the British Library St. Pancras project; £236,000 on the refurbishment of Somerset House for the housing of the Gilbert Collection; £1,500,000 for the refurbishment of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich; a transfer of £1,350,000 from the Department for Education and Employment (Class IX, Vote 1) for awards to dance and drama students; £2,243,000 to meet the general running costs of DCMS, full take up of DCMS/OFLOT running costs end year flexibility amounts as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36.

The increases will be offset by transfers, savings or charged to the Reserve, and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October. [57999]

Mr. Chris Smith: Shortly.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment his Department has made of the current level of the concessionary television licence for the blind. [57629]

Janet Anderson: The Government have not carried out an assessment of the level of the licence fee reduction for blind people. However, the current concessionary arrangements, including those for blind people, will be examined next year as part of the review of the future of the BBC licence fee after 2002. The issues will be examined initially by an independent review panel which will report to the Secretary of State by the end of July. The Government will then consult on the panel's findings.

SCOTLAND

School Attendance

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures the Government are taking to ensure that children of school age attend school regularly. [56711]

Mrs. Liddell: Non-attendance is a significant problem in our schools, and one which the Government take very seriously. All schools and education authorities are setting detailed targets to reduce non-attendance.

Often the most successful strategies for reducing non-attendance are those which schools themselves develop, with the support of parents. To share good practice, the Government funded Scottish Initiative on Attendance and Absence published a good practice document "Close to the Mark" last December. The Ethos Network, also funded by the Government, continues to highlight examples of good practice.

Dental Services

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve access to NHS dental services in Scotland. [56714]

Mr. Galbraith: The Scottish Dental Access Initiative, launched in August 1997, offers grants to dentists setting up or expanding practices in areas of unmet demand for NHS general dental services. This month I approved an extension of the Initiative to offer grants to NHS dentists with strategies to increase patient registrations in areas of high oral health need.

Breast Cancer Radiologists

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to secure provision of additional breast cancer radiologists in Scotland. [56713]

Mr. Galbraith: Cancer is a priority area for the NHS in Scotland. Diagnostic Radiology is recognised to be a shortage speciality due to expansion in service provision and hence consultant numbers. This issue is being addressed through an increase in training numbers.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the names of those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 May 1997, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and whether they receive remuneration. [56815]

Mr. Dewar: As the list is lengthy I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Local Government

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's current estimate of the cost to be borne by Scottish local authorities of spending on contaminated land in (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000 and (c) subsequent years, and of central Government's contributions towards meeting these additional costs. [56958]

Mr. Macdonald: As part of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review, provision of £1.7 million has been made in next year's Scottish local government finance settlement. This will cover the expected revenue costs of site identification and preliminary investigation work associated with the new contaminated land regime. This figure will rise to £2 million per annum thereafter. It is not anticipated that there will be significant expenditure in the current year. The actual cost of remediation will generally fall on those who have caused or knowingly permitted and contamination, or the owner or occupier of the land.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the maximum cost-per-job offered in grant under regional selective assistance in 1997–98 in Scotland. [57044]

Mr. Dewar: The maximum cost-per-job offered was £17,000.

Deaf Jurors

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances a deaf person carrying out jury service is permitted to receive communication support from a palantypist, sign language interpreter or lip speaker; and in what circumstances a deaf juror's interpreter, palantypist or lip speaker may be excluded from a trial (a) in open court and (b) in the jury room. [57600]

Mr. McLeish: There is no statutory bar to a deaf person receiving support from a sign language interpreter or lip speaker in open court. However the presence of another person in the jury room to interpret the comments and views of other jury members would not be permitted. Section 99(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 provides that "no other person shall be present with the jury after they are enclosed".

Combined Heat and Power Plant, Grangemouth

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce his decision on the application submitted by BP Grangemouth CHP Limited on 31 March for consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 and section 57(2) of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1997 to construct and operate a combined heat and power plant at BP Grangemouth. [58278]

Mr. Dewar: Consent for this application was issued on 30 October 1998. My decision was arrived at, after carefully considering all the evidence before me, including the advice of the local planning authority, statutory consultees and all representations received. A copy of the Press Notice announcing this consent together with a copy of the consent letter was placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Cash Limits

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he intends to make to the cash limits and running costs provision for 1998–99 within his responsibility. [58002]

Mr. Dewar: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, I intend to make changes to 7 voted cash limits, 3 non-voted cash blocks and 6 running cost limits:

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 2, Local Government, housing, transport, other environmental services and European Funds, Scotland will be increased by a net total of £100,128,000 from £5,490,737,000 to £5,590,865,000. The net increase reflects a transfer of £24,000 from class V, vote 1 for energy efficiency; £70,100,000 for the redemption of Scottish Homes debt from HM Treasury; additional provision of £1,305,000 for Other Environmental Services which is offset by additional appropriations in aid of £615,000 and a transfer from SO/LA1; additional provision for P&O Ferry Services and Caledonian MacBrayne's piers and harbours work of £2,170,000 reflecting take up of end year flexibility; an additional £4,250,000 for Caledonian MacBrayne's capital grant; a net increase of £1,250,000 for Historic Scotland reflecting take-up of end-year flexibility and transfer to class XIII vote 6; an increase in provision of £6,860,000 for revenue support grant for education (higher still) and childcare from class XIII, vote 3 and also includes £2,730,000 for AEF guarantee funding which is a claim on the Reserve; an increase of £190,000 for the Council Tax Collection and Relief Scheme from SO/LA1; a reduction of provision for Highlands and Islands Airports of £3,000,000 which has been transferred to class XIII, vote 6; the addition of £2,670,000 for Welfare to Work: Childcare transferred from class XIII, vote 3; and the addition of £14,924,000 for grants under the Capital Receipts Initiative transferred from SO/CRI.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 3, Education, industry, arts and libraries, Scotland, will be reduced by £2,815,000 from £1,699,322,000 to £1,696,507,000. The reduction takes account of transfers of £180,000 from class IX, vote 1 in respect of the Scottish Qualifications Authority: £6,806,000 from class XIII, vote 4 for the University of Edinburgh Medical School; £27,000 from class XIII, vote 6 for the National Museum of Scotland; £40,000 from class VI, vote 3 for energy efficiency promotional material and £445,000 from class IX, vote 1 for the Scottish University for Industry. Further additions have been made amounting to £513,000 respect of access to the National Galleries of Scotland and additional administration costs arising from the mis-selling of pensions and £153,000 under the end year flexibility arrangements. A total of £6,800,000 has been transferred to class XIII, vote 2 in respect of Higher Still and the provision, planning and development of childcare by local authorities with £2,000,000 being transferred to SO/LA1 in respect of advanced factory provision. In addition, £2,179,000 has been given up to the Reserve following a cash limit breach in 1997–98.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 4, Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland, will be increased by a net total of £83,957,000 from £3,913,650,000 to £3,997,607,000. The increase includes £86,323,000 reflecting the take up of end year flexibility; a transfer of £369,000 from class XI, vote 2 for the cost of services provided by the Medical Devices Agency which were previously funded on a UK basis; a transfer of £6,806,000 to class XIII, vote 3 to meet the essential capital costs of providing teaching facilities as a result of the relocation of Edinburgh University Medical School; a transfer of £20,000 from class XI, vote 1 in respect of patients resident in England who attend a Scottish medical practice; and some adjustments to reflect changes to anticipated appropriations-in-aid. The NHS Trusts' External Financing Limit has also been increased by £11,528,000 from -£24,871,000 to -£13,343,000.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 5 will be increased by £7,953,000 from £663,596,000 to £671,549,000 within which the running costs limit will be increased by £1,567,000 from £147,652,000 to £149,219,000. The cash limit increase includes the take up of EYF entitlements of £3,000,000 under the running costs scheme, £2,000,000 under capital and £1,072,000 under the HPSS scheme. Transfers of £800,000 from class XIII, vote 2 to fund Section 10 grants from ESF, £500,000 from SO/LA1 to fund a new subhead dealing with the Lockerbie trial and £400,000 to fund a new subhead for the millennium volunteers are included. There will also be a number of minor inter and intra-vote transfers.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 6, Scottish Office Administration, will be increased by £11,441,000 from £151,869,000 to £163,310,000. Within this total the running cost provision for Scottish Office Administration is being increased by £9,834,000 as a result of the take up of end-year flexibility and transfers from other votes; the additional running costs provision is required primarily to meet running costs pressures associated with the establishment of the Scottish Parliament. Provision for capital expenditure is being increased by £1,509,000 from £29,521,000 to £31,030,000 as a result of take up of end-year flexibility under the capital scheme and a transfer of £50,000 from class XIII vote 2. This additional provision is required to fund operationally essential IT projects. Provision for other current expenditure is being increased by £98,000 from £4,863,000 to £4,961,000 to finance IT software purchases by the Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 7, General Register Office for Scotland, will be decreased by £100,000 from £5,577,000 to £5,477,000. Within this total the running cost limit will be decreased by £200,000 to £5,477,000. Within this total the running cost limit will be decreased by £200,000 from £7,703,000 to £7,503,000 due to a transfer to £100,000 to class XIII, vote 6 and a transfer of £100,000 to capital provision. The increase in capital provision by £200,000 from £380,000 to £580,000 is required to complete a major refurbishment of New Register House and for upgrading IT hardware to ensure year 2000 compliance. Appropriations in Aid have been increased by £100,000 from £2,302,000 to £2,402,000 primarily due to increased demand by the public for access to registration records.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 8, Scottish Record Office, will be increased by £602,000 from £3,470,000 to £4,072,000. Within this total, the running cost provision will be increased by £402,000 from £3,966,000 to £4,368,000 due to the take up of end-year flexibility. This will fund the internal reorganisation of the Department aimed at delivering future efficiency savings. The increase in capital provision of £200,000 from £432,000 to £632,000 resulting from the take up of end-year flexibility will fund the continuing refurbishment work at General Register House and design work being undertaken on Thomas Thomson House, phase 2.

The Scottish Office running costs limit will increase by £16,176,000 from £320,315,000 to £336,491,000. The increase results primarily from a transfer of £3,000,000 from class XIII, vote 2, a transfer of £4,000,000 from SO/LA1, a transfer of £1,800,000 from class XVI, vote 4 and the take up of end-year flexibility.

SO/LA1

The non-voted cash limit SO/LA1, which covers non-housing capital expenditure by local authorities will be reduced by a net total of £1,618,000 from £369,295,000 to £367,677,000. The reduction reflects a transfer of £5,583,000 to class XIII, vote 2 covering a range of pressures; £500,000 to class XIII, vote 5 for expenses of the Lockerbie trial; £4,000,000 to class XIII, vote 6 for the Scottish Parliament; an increase of £2,000,000 for Borders assistance from class XIII, vote 3 and take up of end year flexibility of £6,465,000.

SO/CRI

The non-voted cash limit SO/CRI, which covers capital expenditure on the Capital Receipts Initiative has been reduced by a net total of £14,300,000 from £43,660,000 to £29,360,000. This reduction reflects a transfer of £14,924,000 to class XIII, vote 2 and take up of end year flexibility of £624,000.

SO/ERDF

The non-voted cash limit SO/ERDF, which covers European Regional Development Fund expenditure in Scotland will be increased by a net £57,085,000 from £78,187,000 to £135,272,000 in respect of the take up of end year flexibility and a transfer of £800,000 to class XIII, vote 5.

All increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October 1998. [57987]

Mr. Dewar: Shortly.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total allocation of funding made available to each district council and unitary authority in Wales for each of the years 1990 to 1998; and what was the proportion of the allocation spent in each case. [56517]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The allocation of funding to each district and county council for 1990–91 to 1995–96 inclusive and to each unitary authority for 1996–97 to 1998–99 inclusive is shown in the following tables. The funding for county councils includes police grant for the years 1990–91 to 1994–95, police authorities have been directly funded from 1995–96 onwards. In all cases authorities' spending has been above the grant allocated to them which has principally been funded through the community charge/council tax.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans his Department has to promote the early screening programme for cervical cancer. [56410]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Department is currently working with Velindre NHS Trust in Cardiff to develop the National Service Framework for Cervical Screening Services in Wales, highlighted in the White Paper—NHS Wales: Putting Patients First, published in January 1998. The framework will begin to be implemented for the whole of Wales by 1 April 1999. The current take-up rate for cervical smears is 84 per cent. of women aged 20–64.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the maximum cost-per-job offered in grant under regional selective assistance in 1997–98 in Wales. [57045]

Mental Health

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what amounts he has assisted MIND in Wales in the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [57443]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Under the Mental Illness Strategy the Welsh Office has paid or allocated the following grant assistance to MIND in Wales in the financial years 1996–97 to 1998–99:

MIND Cymru[1]	185,091	189,193	190,492
Local MIND Groups[2]	852,364	912,135	924,112
Total	1,037,455	1,101,328	1,114,604

[1] Grant awarded under the National Voluntary Organisations element of the Mental Illness Strategy and contributes to MIND Cymru's core costs
[2] Grants awarded to local MIND Groups under the Support for People with Disabilities Grant Scheme and for 1996–97 and 1997–98 the Local Voluntary Organisations (LVO) element of the Mental Illness Strategy. From 1998–99 the LVO scheme was replaced by the Local Mental Health Grants Scheme which is administered on behalf of the Welsh Office by the Wales Council for Voluntary Action. Grant awards to local MIND groups are project based and cover a number of activities including drop-in facilities; befriending services; provision of supported accommodation and advocacy services

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he is proposing to make to the (a) voted and (b) non-voted cash limits for his Department and the office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales for the current financial year. [58155]

Mr. Michael: Subject to Parliament's approval of the related Supplementary Estimates, I propose the following changes:

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 1 will be increased by 1,307,000 from £41,428,000 to £42,735,000. This increase reflects the take up of £2,000,000 of capital end-year flexibility amounts as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36, for arterial drainage and coast protection schemes and the transfer of £693,000 to class XIV, Vote 3 for Tir Gofal start-up costs.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 2 will be increased by £6,713,000 from £833,063,000 to £839,776,000. This increase mainly reflects the take-up of end-year flexibility amounts for schools capital of £2,357,000 (including £991,000 of windfall tax resources); an increase in the budget for Regional Selective Assistance of £5,217,000, a transfer of £1,045,000 to class XIV, vote 4 for health related training and a transfer of £293,000 to class XIV, vote 3 for the National Childcare Strategy.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 3 has been increased by £17,094,000 from £397,101,000 to £414,195,000 and the running costs limit will increase by £6,124,000 from £73,613,000 to £79,784,000. This increase results mainly from the take up of end-year flexibility amounts totally £14,900,000. Of which £2,820,000 has been allocated to the Central Government Roads Programme, £4,028,000 to cover slippage on local authority road scheme, £428,000 to Cadw, £1,000,000 to cover the costs of the North Wales Child Abuse Inquiry and £500,000 to the Mental Handicap Strategy. There are also a number of transfers in and out of the vote including £693,000 from class XIV, vote 1 for Tir Gofal start up costs, £200,000 from class IV, vote 2 for cattle passports and £293,000 from class XIV, vote 2 for the National Childcare Strategy.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 4 has been increased by £23,389,000 from £2,093,541,000 to £2,116,930,000. This increase mainly reflects the take up of end-year flexibility amounts to meet the revenue costs of Health Authorities (£12,960,000) and the identified capital requirements of NHS Trusts (£17,000,000); the transfer of £8,000,000 into the provision for non-cash limited family health services; the transfer of £1,045,000 from class XIV, vote 2 in respect of health related courses; a transfer of £185,000 from class XI, vote 2 in respect of the Medical Devices Agency evaluation and £210,000 transferred from class IX, vote 1 relating to students taking higher education courses in professions allied to medicine. The Trust external financing limit has increased by £18,368,000 from £4,308,000 to £52,676,000.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 5 has been increased by £80,000 from £2,449,735,000 to £2,449,815,000 to cover the costs of the review of Standard Spending Assessments.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 6 has been reduced by £2,448,000 from £10,216,000 to £7,768,000. The increases are mainly as a result of savings in the nursery inspections programme which has been partially offset by an increase in running costs and the running costs limit has been increased by £323,000 from £3,147,000 to £3,470,000.

The non-voted cash limit local authority capital cash limit WO/LACAP has been increased by £3,003,000 from £370,441,000 to £373,444,000. This increase reflects the take up of £6,385,000 of end-year flexibility mainly to meet slippage on projects supported under (i) Transport Grant (£2,506,000), (ii) Strategic Development Scheme (£2,054,000), (iii) Capital Challenge (£1,372,000). The increase is offset by a reduction of £3,382,000 in the provision for local government reorganisation costs due to lower than expected claims from local authorities.

The non-voted housing cash limit WO/TC has been reduced by £1,168,000 from £74,364,000 to £73,196,000 as result of a transfer within class XIV, vote 3 of supported housing revenue grant from the housing to the personal social services sections.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charges to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the overall level of planned public expenditure.

Welsh Cancer Registry

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the names of the individual consultants who worked under contract to the Welsh Cancer Registry from 1992 until the Registry was closed in 1996. [56375]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: No consultants were employed by the Wales Cancer Registry from 1992 to 1996.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October. [57988]

Mr. Michael: Shortly.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Services (Rural Areas)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on his policy towards the availability and provision of court services in rural areas. [56844]

Mr. Hoon: Magistrates courts are locally managed by magistrates' courts committees under the provisions of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. Decisions concerning the future and number of magistrates' courts in their area are for the relevant MCC to determine. A local authority that contributes financially may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure when such a proposal has been made by a local MCC. The procedure for such appeals is set out in section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. In the absence of an appeal, however, the Lord Chancellor plays no part in the process.

The Court Service is responsible for all civil and the higher criminal courts and is required constantly to monitor and review the viability of its court network. Factors taken into consideration include the role played by the court in providing a service to the public in that area, and the effect and implications of providing an alternative for its current users. The criteria for considering the case for and against closure as set out in the Departmental Accommodation Plan are: the condition of the existing accommodation; the availability of facilities; the frequency of judicial visits and waiting times; the facilities provided by the alternative court; and the capacity of that court to cater for the additional work; and distances and public transport considerations. In general, the Court service must look to improve services to an area overall.

Magistrates

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to increase the representation of ethnic minorities among lay and Stipendiary Magistrates; and if he will make a statement. [56723]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor requires his Advisory Committees on the appointment of lay magistrates to identify the ethnic composition of their areas and to make strenuous efforts to recruit suitable persons to reflect that composition. A survey of lay magistrates (excluding those in the Duchy of Lancaster) conducted in 1997 indicated that 4.1 per cent. classified themselves as belonging to an ethnic minority. In 1997 the percentage of appointments from the ethnic minorities was 6.5 per cent. Vacancies for acting Stipendiary Magistrates and Stipendiary Magistrates are open to all who are statutorily qualified and applications from members of ethnic minorities are positively encouraged.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to issue guidelines on cultural, racial and self awareness training for lay magistrates. [56724]

Mr. Hoon: In 1997 the Lord Chancellor approved a major change in the way lay magistrates are trained. In future they will have to demonstrate, through appraisal, performance against a range of required competencies in order that they will be able fully to discharge the full implications of the Judicial Oath. These competencies include: knowledge of different cultures, ethnic minority communities, disadvantaged and vulnerable groups, discrimination and its impact, relevant equality legislation, an understanding of labelling, stereotyping, language and cultural differences, body language and one's own conditioning and personal prejudices.

This new approach to training is being implemented by Magistrates Court Committees over the next 12 months.

As part of the resources for achieving the attainment of these competencies the Judicial Studies Board, in conjunction with the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders (NACRO), has produced an Equal Treatment training pack which has been supplied to each MCC and magistrates' training officer.

Cash Limits

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what changes he plans to make to the cash and running costs limits of the Lord Chancellor's Department Class VIII, Vote 1 for 1998–99. [58087]

Mr. Hoon: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class VIII Vote 1 will be reduced by £2,258,000 from £561,119,000 to £558,861,000. The running costs limit will be reduced by £39,000 from £458,100,000 to £458,061,000.

The reduction to the running costs limit relates to transfers of £485,000 returning to the Home Office owing to the revised timetable for ECHR training under the Human Rights Act 1998 and £446,000 from the Home Office in respect of the Crime and Disorder Bill.

The cash limit reduction of £2,258,000 relates to transfers of £2,065,000 to the Home Office (owing to revised timetable for ECHR training under the Human Rights Act 1998), £1,338,000 from and £1,251,000 to the Home Office (Crime and Disorder Bill), and £280,000 to Supplementary Credit Approvals non-voted expenditure (as a result of a transfer of funds from Magistrates Courts Current Grant to Capital Grant).

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October 1998. [57998]

Mr. Hoon: Shortly.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish the names of those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 May 1997, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and whether they receive remuneration. [56794]

Mr. Hoon: The following brings up to date the list of non-judicial appointments made to the Lord Chancellor's public bodies which was provided in my Answer to the hon. Member on 15 December 1997, Official Report, columns 44–45. It does not include re-appointments.

Telford County Court

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how much the proposed new extension at Telford County Court will cost. [56456]

Mr. Hoon: There are no plans to build a further extension at Telford County Court. However, a reconfiguration of the current office space and hearing rooms is being investigated at a projected cost of approximately £400,000. This work is mainly as a result of the Civil Justice Reforms and only in part to meet the possible transfer of work from Shrewsbury.

TREASURY

Unemployment

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men and (b) women counted as unemployed according to the International Labour Organisation's criteria are not currently in receipt of jobseeker's allowance or any other form of unemployment benefit; and what were the figures in each case in each of the last five years. [57082]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Phyllis Starkey, dated October 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on unemployment.

Estimates of the number of men and women who are ILO unemployed but not claiming unemployment benefits for the period Spring 1992 to Summer 1996 are published in Table 7.5 of the April 1998 issue of Labour Market Trends which is available in the House of Commons Library. On average over the period, 84% of ILO unemployed men and 41% of ILO unemployed women were claimants. The proportion of ILO unemployed who were claimants dropped from 72% in 1992 to 66% in 1996.

The figures are derived with reference to both the claimant count and Labour Force Survey results using a methodology based on the results of a study which linked the two data sources. These results cannot be applied after Summer 1996 because of the changes in the benefit system. The ONS is carrying out a second study to decide whether reliable estimates can be produced for the period following the introduction of the Jobseeker's Allowance. The results of this study will be published in Labour Market Trends early next year.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative

Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when and for what reasons Nigeria was removed from the list of countries eligible for the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. [57694]

Ms Hewitt: There is no definitive list of countries that will be eligible for debt relief under the HIPC initiative. Eligibility for the initiative is determined on a case-by-case basis. Criteria used to determine the eligibility of a country include being entitled to World Bank assistance only for the International Development Association (IDA), and the unsustainability of its debt burden even after the full application of traditional debt relief mechanisms.

Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what forecast for world economic growth was originally used to calculate the debt sustainability ratios of countries in the Heavily Indebted Poor Country Initiative; and what assessment he has made of the impact of revised forecasts for growth on the Government's forecast for debt sustainability. [57695]

Ms Hewitt: A country's debt burden is considered unsustainable for the purposes of the HIPC initiative if the debt to exports ratio (in Net Present Value terms) is above 200–250 per cent. after the application of all traditional debt relief mechanisms. This ratio is not itself dependent on any particular rate of world economic growth. In as much as the level of world economic growth affects a country's exports, however, it will impact on the denominator of this ratio.

Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps will be taken to revise the debt sustainability ratios used in the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative to take account of revised estimates of world growth for 1998. [57696]

Ms Hewitt: At the recent meeting of the Development Committee of the IMF and World Bank, it was agreed that there would be a comprehensive review of the HIPC initiative as early as 1999. UK Ministers urged that this review should include consideration of current debt sustainability criteria.

EMU

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the national currency reserves of member states proceeding to stage 3 of Economic and Monetary Union will be (a) deposited and (b) subsequently available for use by the European Central Bank; if those amounts will be published; and what authority within the Central Bank will be required for them to be used. [57485]

Ms Hewitt: Article 30 of the ESCB Statute states that the individual contributions of the national central banks of participating Member States to the foreign reserve assets of the European Central Bank shall be fixed in proportion to their shares in the subscribed capital of the ECB. Under Article 29 of the ESCB Statute, this provides for weightings based on relative population and national income.

In July, the Governing Council of the ECB decided on the size of the initial transfer of foreign reserve assets to the ECB from the national central banks of participating Member States. The initial transfer of foreign reserve assets will total approximately 40 billion euro. This amounts to around 10 per cent. of the total foreign reserve assets held by euro area Member States at end-September 1998. The remaining reserve assets will be the responsibility of the national central banks, subject to Article 31 of the ESCB Statute.

Article 105(2) of the EC Treaty provides that the European System of Central Banks will hold and manage the foreign reserves transferred by participating Member States and may use these reserves to conduct foreign exchange operations. Under Article 9.2 of the ESCB Statute, tasks conferred upon the ECB may be implemented by the ECB either through its own activities or through the national central banks of participating Member States. The respective roles of the ECB and the euro area central banks in foreign exchange policy issues is a decision for the ECB's governing bodies: the Governing Council and the Executive Board.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what body will act as lender of last resort in (a) each individual EMU member and (b) Europe as a whole when the European Central Bank comes into operation. [57460]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by the then Economic Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Airdrie and Shotts (Mrs. Liddell), on 9 June 1998, Official Report, column 496. The position as set out in the EC Treaty has not changed.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the (a) policy and (b) operational decisions of the European Central Bank will, after 1 January 1999, be the responsibility of its (i) Governing Board, (ii) Executive Council and (iii) Presidency. [57462]

Ms Hewitt: The responsibilities of the Governing Council, Executive Board and President of the European Central Bank are set out in Articles 12 and 13 of the Statute of the ESCB—Protocol No.3 to the EC Treaty. This includes some discretion for the Governing Council to delegate certain powers to the Executive Board.

EU Budget

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the main items of income and expenditure of the general budget of the European Community and the contributions and receipts of the United Kingdom, for each year since 1973 calculated at 1996 prices. [57458]

Ms Hewitt: This information can be found in various readily available published sources. The main items of income and expenditure of the general budget of the European Community can be found in the Overview to the 1999 EC Preliminary Draft Budget (SEC)98 800. Information on the United Kingdom's gross contributions, abatement and public sector receipts for the period 1986–87 to 1997–98 can be found in Departmental Reports of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments from 1992 to 1998. Information relating to the years 1985–86 back to 1973–74 can be found in "The Government's Expenditure Plans" from 1979 to 1991. Copies of all these documents are available in the House of Commons Library. An updated list of GDP deflators will be placed in the House of Commons Library, enabling comparison in 1996 prices.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards future negotiations relating to the British rebate from the EU. [57415]

Ms Hewitt: The Commission's Own Resources report (7 October 1998) notes:

"even after the rebate, the UK remains a larger net contributor to the EU budget than Member States with a higher capacity to pay".

Against this background the Government are satisfied that the UK abatement remains fully justified. As the Prime Minister told the House on 17 June 1998, Official Report, column 368,

"we shall maintain the United Kingdom budget rebate".

Departmental Spending Plans

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral statement by the Economic Secretary of 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 75, what is the size (a) in absolute terms and (b) as a percentage of each department's spending head of the margins to cover uncertainties built into departmental spending plans. [57594]

Mr. Byers: Table 4.4 of the "Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report" (Cm 3978) showed surpluses on current budget, over and above the balanced position that is necessary to achieve the golden rule. There are additional elements of caution built into the projections from the reserve within DEL and the AME margin in the public spending plans. Figures for departmental spending plans were published in the Comprehensive Spending Review (Cm 4011).

Dividend Tax Credits

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy in respect of the repayment of dividend tax credits to non-taxpayers; and if he will make a statement. [57121]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 October 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable) on 26 October, Official Report, column 37.

Compensation Claims

Mr. Townend: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost to public funds of claims by employees and the public for compensation in respect of (a) personal injury and (b) employment protection in the latest available year. [56766]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The information is not held centrally.

Young People (Cardiac Disease Deaths)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his Department collects data on the number of young people who have died from cardiac disease; and if he will make a statement. [57135]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Brian Jenkins, dated 2 November 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the number of young people who have died from cardiac disease.

The ONS collects data on all deaths registered in England and Wales and these are published annually by cause, quinary age-group and sex in the ONS publication "Mortality statistics: Cause, England and Wales" Series DH2, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

The ONS does not have a standard definition of what constitutes a "young" person. However, in 1997, the latest year for which figures are available, 316 people aged under 30 died from diseases of the heart.

Suicides (Agricultural Workers)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many suicides have been recorded amongst farmers and other agricultural employees in each of the last 10 years. [57663]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Maclean, dated 2 November 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on suicides amongst farmers and other agricultural employees.

The data relate to persons aged between 16 and 74 at the time of their death. Occupation is not coded for deaths to those aged 75 and over.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each overseas trip which he has undertaken on official business over the last four months, giving in each case the (a) destination, (b) purpose, (c) duration, (d) means of transport, (e) individuals accompanying him, (f) cost and (g) dates; and if he will make a statement. [57542]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) on 22 October 1998, Official Report, column 1200.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of revenue raised as landfill tax is paid by local authorities. [57894]

Ms Hewitt: This information is not held by HM Customs and Excise.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October 1998. [57994]

Ms Hewitt: The hon. Member did not table a question to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 7 October.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 16 September to the Financial Secretary on behalf of his constituents Mr. and Mrs. Hibbert. [57528]

Dawn Primarolo: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 26 October 1998.

Jobs Package

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with his EU counterparts on the implementation of a Europe-wide jobs package; and if he will make a statement. [57493]

Ms Hewitt: I, along with my ministerial colleagues, discuss employment matters with our counterparts in other member states from time to time.

Cash Limits

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed in the cash limit and running costs limit for the Inland Revenue in 1998–99. [58269]

Dawn Primarolo: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVI Vote 4 will be increased by £97,284,000 from £1,633,425,000 to £1,730,709,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £84,284,000 from £1,726,296 to £1,810,580,000.

The vote is eligible for a cash limit increase of £28,084,000 running costs and £1,968,000 capital in respect of end year flexibility amounts as announced by my right hon. Friend the then Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36.

In addition there are increases in the cash limit of £46,000,000 running costs for preparatory work on the introduction of income tax credits and work on other measures announced in the March 1998 Budget, and £12,000,000 running costs and £11,032,000 capital to upgrade the department's computer systems.

Offsetting these increases is a transfer of £1,800,000 to the Scottish Office, class XIII, vote 6 in respect of a reduction in the forecast need for development work on income tax in Scotland.

All the increases other than that relating to the interdepartmental transfer will be charged to the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

6. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on problems of overstretch in the armed forces, with particular reference to the future of the Territorial Army. [55882]

Mr. George Robertson: The Strategic Defence Review concluded that we must match the commitments we undertake to our planned resources. This, together with our commitment to achieve full manning for all three Services, will relieve overstretch. Our proposals for the Territorial Army will allow them to be used in a wider and more flexible way. In areas such as medical services, where there is a particular shortage of Regular personnel, we are looking at substantial increases in the number of Territorial Army personnel.

22. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army centres he proposes to close; and how many of them have ancillary army cadet corps units. [55901]

26. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the security of tenure of the TA centre in Haslucks Green road in Shirley in the Solihull constituency and its future use as the parading venue of navy, army and air cadets. [55907]

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Territorial Army in Sussex. [55883]

Mr. Doug Henderson: An announcement on the future of the Territorial Army will be made shortly.

29. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the impact of funding changes on the effectiveness of the Territorial Army. [55910]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The new arrangements for the funding of the Territorial Army, which will come into effect in April 2000, are designed to improve the administration of spending on the TA. We do not anticipate that there will be any adverse impact on the operational effectiveness of the TA as a result of the changes.

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the role of Territorial Army units in aiding civil authorities in their own areas in times of disaster. [56831]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Territorial Army units are able to provide military aid to civil authorities within their local areas, as an adjunct to their main roles. The links forged with local communities are being taken into account in the current review of the future structure of the Territorial Army.

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he will take to ensure that the establishment of medical units and field hospitals in the Territorial Army is up to strength and has the appropriate mix of skilled doctors and nurses. [56826]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It is my Department's aim that all Territorial Army medical units and field hospitals should be fully complemented with appropriately skilled medical personnel. A review of Army medical services is currently underway and will address a number of issues, including current recruiting difficulties.

Ethnic Minorities (Recruitment)

21. Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the latest figures for recruitment to the armed forces among ethnic minorities. [55900]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South-East (Dr. Iddon) in the House today, Official Report, column 546.

Defence Medical Services

23. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to improve the funding of the Defence Medical Services. [55902]

Mr. George Robertson: Following the Strategic Defence Review, significant additional funding, some £140 million, has been made available to enhance the operational capability of the Defence Medical Services and address problems in the Defence Secondary Care Agency. Specific measures include:

Operational Capability

addressing current personnel and equipment shortfalls across the three Services as a matter of priority; procurement of a 200 bed primary casualty receiving ship, with a second one available on contract at longer notice if required; ensuring that an additional 800 field hospital beds are available at guaranteed higher readiness; along with their appropriate surgical and other support;

the enhancement of the Army's Regular ambulance evacuation capability;

the establishment a Regular operational medical supply organisation;

the provision of an additional Regular RAF aeromedical evacuation flight and 18 air escort flights;

the enhancement of our capability to provide Regular medical support for deployed operating bases and support helicopters;

Defence Secondary Care Agency

the recruitment of approximately 250 hospital specialists, nurses, technicians and other personnel to bring the Agency up to establishment; funding to enable potential recruits to be medically evaluated more quickly by specialists when required; the enhancement of the community psychiatry service.

Naval Air Repair Organisation

24. Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there will be a full audit of the new business scheme at present being used by the Naval Air Repair Organisation prior to the organisation being integrated into the new Defence Aviation Repair Agency. [55903]

Mr. Spellar: There are no plans for the audit of the business scheme used by the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation to take place before the vesting of the Defence Aviation Repair Agency scheduled for 1 April 1999. The new system is operational but the project cannot be closed until the outstanding mandatory requirement for year 2000 compliancy is met. Firm plans are in place to achieve compliancy by February 1999.

A post-project evaluation will take place in the latter half of 1999, within six months of project completion.

Nuclear Disarmament

25. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Government are taking to promote global nuclear disarmament. [55905]

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Government are taking to promote global nuclear disarmament. [55777]

Mr. George Robertson: The Government set out their comprehensive approach towards nuclear disarmament in the Strategic Defence Review (SDR) in July 1998. Many of the national measures announced in the SDR will help lay the ground for UK participation in multilateral negotiations when the conditions are right. In addition, since May 1997 the United Kingdom has:

ratified the Treaty of Raratonga (South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone) in September 1997;

ratified the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty in April 1998;

agreed strengthened international safeguards arrangements for the UK with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in September 1998, following international agreement of model strengthened international safeguards arrangements for non-nuclear-weapon states in May 1998;

played an active role in the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty Strengthened Review Process in preparation for the next Review Conference in 2000;

engaged in international consideration at the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva of security assurances to Non-Nuclear-Weapon States;

worked for the successful agreement at the Conference on Disarmament in August 1998 on the opening of negotiations on a treaty to prohibit the production of fissile material in nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices;

entered into discussions with the states of Central Asia on establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in their region;

played a leading role in co-ordinating the international response to the nuclear tests conducted by India and Pakistan in May 1998;

contributed nationally and through the European Union to the Korean Peninsula Energy Development Organisation (KEDO) to assist in full implementation of North Korea's international safeguards obligations; and continued to make a major contribution to the IAEA's efforts in Iraq.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress the Government have made towards multi-lateral nuclear disarmament since May 1997. [56028]

Mr. George Robertson: The Government set out their comprehensive approach towards nuclear disarmament in the Strategic Defence Review (SDR) in July 1998. Many of the national measures announced in the SDR will help lay the ground for UK participation in multilateral negotiations when the conditions are right. These include the reduction in the size of our deterrent; greater transparency about our nuclear and fissile material stockpiles; placing fissile material no longer required for defence purposes under international safeguards; reprocessing of spent fuel from the defence Chapelcross reactors under international safeguards; beginning a national historical accounting for fissile material produced; and beginning a programme to develop UK expertise in verifying the reduction and elimination of nuclear weapons. In addition, since May 1997 the United Kingdom has:

ratified the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty in April 1998;

agreed strengthened international safeguards arrangements for the UK with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in September 1998, following international agreement of model strengthened international safeguards arrangements for non-nuclear-weapon states in May 1998;

played an active role in the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty Strengthened Review Process in preparation for the next Review Conference in 2000;

engaged in international consideration at the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva of security assurances to Non-Nuclear-Weapon States;

worked for the successful agreement at the Conference on Disarmament in August 1998 on the opening of negotiations on a treaty to prohibit the production of fissile material in nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices;

entered into discussions with the states of Central Asia on establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in their region;

played a leading role in coordinating the international response to the nuclear test conducted by India and Pakistan in May 1998;

contributed nationally and through the European Union to the Korean Peninsula Energy Development Organisation (KEDO) to assist in full implementation of North Korea's international safeguards obligations; and continued to make a major contribution to the IAEA's efforts in Iraq.

Duchess of Kent's Hospital, Catterick

28. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide additional funds to Northallerton health services to offset the impact of the reduction of services at the Duchess of Kent's hospital at Catterick. [55909]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are no plans to transfer funds from my Department to Northallerton Health Services, following the reduction of services at the Duchess of Kent's Hospital, Catterick.

It is the responsibility of the North Yorkshire Health Authority to provide and allocate their own resources for civilian patient care in their area.

Education and Training

30. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Government are taking to improve education and training opportunities for service men and women and their dependants. [55911]

Mr. George Robertson: We already provide a wide range of education and training opportunities for Armed forces personnel. My "Learning Forces" initiative extends from recruitment to resettlement and beyond, and includes improvements in Service children's schools. It will be a major contribution to the Government's commitment to improving educational opportunities.

Serco Denholm

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to modify the operation undertaken, on behalf of his Department, in the firth of Clyde by Serco Denholm. [55879]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Serco Denholm provides the Royal Navy with parts services in the Firth of Clyde. We are at the early stages in considering with Serco Denholm whether the vessels operated by the company on behalf of my Department can be utilised more extensively.

Archer Communications Project

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Archer Communications project. [55894]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave earlier today, Official Report, column 552.

Defence Diversification White Paper

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the Government's White Paper on Defence Diversification. [55908]

Mr. Spellar: We hope to publish the White Paper on Defence Diversification shortly.

Gulf War

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the number of British service personnel who were within range of the fallout from the demolition of the Iraqi nerve agent dump at Khamisiyah after the Gulf War in March 1991; how many British service personnel could have been exposed to nerve agents following the demolition of the dump; what work is currently being carried out to re-assess these figures; who is carrying out this work; when this work started and when it is expected to end; if this work is being carried out in co-operation with the United States Government; and if he will make a statement. [55332]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In September 1997, the US Department of Defense (DoD) published a report on the work it had undertaken to try to model the possible dispersion of nerve agent from the demolition of Iraqi chemical munitions at the Khamisiyah ammunition storage facility by US forces in March 1991. This report included a series of maps for successive days showing the theoretical dispersion plume of low concentrations of nerve agent arising from the Khamisiyah demolitions, as predicted by DoD computer modelling.

The Ministry of Defence (MOD) has been keeping in contact with the US authorities on this issue. After the DoD announcement, the MOD obtained a data package from them which allowed UK officials to construct maps on which the known locations of UK units could be plotted in relation to the DoD modelled plume. The initial work on these maps was completed in late 1997, following a trawl of available information as to the location of UK units on 10 and 11 March, which are the days when the DoD modelled plume was at its most extensive. This work was further updated in May of this year on the basis of further research into British unit locations. Overall, this established that on the critical two days, the following UK unit location data are available:

	10 March	11 March
Total UK units in Theatre	175	175
Locations known[1]	67	72
Recent locations known[2]	51	47
Possible locations known[3]	39	38
Locations not known[4]	18	18

[1] Specific location information for the unit is available for the days in question.
[2] Specific location information is available for the unit some days prior to 10/11 March, in effect the last known location before 10/11 March.
[3] Some information is available for the unit which suggests a possible location for it on or about 10/11 March.
[4] No useful location data for the unit are available for the period around 10/11 March.

This location information is incomplete because UK units and formations officially returned to peacetime reporting procedures, and ceased to record location as a matter of routine, 1200 hours on 8 March (in fact, research has shown that some units ceased wartime reporting as early as 28 February).

Given that the first two stages of work had left a high degree of uncertainty as to many unit locations, it was decided to seek alternative sources of information in order to establish if the location data could be improved. This process is still under way and it is not possible to say when it may be completed or what the outcome may be. However, so far no major improvements in the data have been achieved.

The DoD modelling of the possible Khamisiyah plume is based on a series of worst case assumptions and has a number of limitations. These have been highlighted in the recent report on Gulf War Illnesses by the Special Investigation Unit on behalf of the US Senate Committee on Veterans Affairs.

In view of the current limitations of the available location data on UK units and of the DoD modelling, at present the MOD is not able to give a realistic assessment of the number of UK Service personnel who might have been subject to possible exposure to nerve agent as a result of the Khamisiyah demolitions.

The DoD modelling predicts that personnel within the plume could have received a brief and low level exposure to nerve agent. Current medical evidence suggests that long term health problems would be unlikely to result from exposure to such low levels, although US authorities are funding several research studies to investigate this further.

In response to two questions asked in another place last October, the MOD has been undertaking a review of events concerning a particular UK unit, 32 Field Hospital, and the Khamisiyah incident. This review will include a detailed assessment of the significance of the nerve agent exposure predicted by the DoD modelling.

Trident

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the conventional forces assigned to protect Trident (a) permanently and (b) in an emergency, indicating the annual operating costs of each in the last year for which figures are available. [55371]

Mr. George Robertson: There are no conventional forces operating permanently in protection of Trident. The force elements which we assume for planning purposes to have a role in support of Trident are listed in Annex B to the Strategic Defence Review Supporting Essay on Future Military Capabilities (Essay Six) against Military Task 27—Nuclear forces.

These forces are in practice routinely engaged in a variety of training and other tasks whilst being held at varying levels of readiness for support of Trident. Those designated as "committed" are at short notice; those designated "contingent" are primarily provided for other tasks and would be called upon in support of Trident only in an extreme emergency.

The annual operating cost of "committed" forces is estimated at around £125 million. (This figure also includes an element for six Sea King anti-submarine warfare helicopters and one survey vessel, which are not considered major force elements for the purposes of the force structure tables in the SDR Supporting Essay). For the reasons given, this figure is not attributable directly to Trident, nor does it represent the potential saving if the Trident role were discontinued. The annual operating cost of the forces with a "contingent" role is around £176 million.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the reduced day-to-day alert state of UK Trident missiles referred to in the report on the Strategic Defence Review involves physical changes to the missiles or their guidance systems. [55868]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 October 1998]: No physical changes to the missiles or guidance systems are involved; UK Trident missiles have been detargeted since 1994. During the Cold War submarines on deterrent patrol were routinely at Quick Reaction Alert, able to fire their missiles within a few minutes. With the single submarine on deterrent patrol now at several days notice to fire, the Commanding Officer has greater flexibility in the day-to-day operation of the vessel and is able to carry out the secondary tasks announced in the Strategic Defence Review without compromising the security or the effectiveness of the deterrent.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum number of warheads with which UK Trident missiles have been (a) tested and (b) deployed. [55986]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 October 1998]: To reveal the number of inert re-entry bodies carried during Trident test firings, or the number of live warheads deployed on individual Trident missiles on UK submarines would give a harmful insight into the capabilities of our deterrent. Therefore I am withholding the answer under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Trident submarines are on patrol; what are the total number of war heads in service; and on what target the warheads are directed. [57689]

Mr. George Robertson: We have only one Trident submarine on deterrent patrol at a time. Its missiles are detargetted. Concerning the total number of warheads in service, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 167.

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how his Department's estimate of the costs of building and equipping two new aircraft carriers is accounted for within (a) the Strategic Defence Review and (b) elsewhere. [55798]

Mr. George Robertson: The affordability of the defence equipment programme is assessed through an annual Long Term Costing process, covering a rolling 10 year period. In line with the conclusions of the Strategic Defence Review, provision has been made for those costs of the future carrier programme which fall within this period. It is my firm intention that future Long Term Costings will contain provision for costs which fall outside the current Long Term Costing period.

Aircraft Spare Parts

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF aircraft of each type have been used to provide spare parts for other aircraft in each of the last three years. [56051]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

"Cannibalisation" of aircraft for parts is a recognised procedure practised by air forces around the world. If an aircraft is undergoing maintenance and is not available for flight, parts may be taken from it to keep other aircraft serviceable, thereby ensuring that the maximum number of aircraft are available with the minimum number awaiting spares deliveries. Stringent procedures are in place to ensure that cannibalisation does not adversely affect air worthiness.

Defence Secondary Care Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average finished consultant episode cost for the Defence Secondary Care Agency for 1997–98; what was the equivalent figure for 1996–97; what target was set for 1997–98 for this indicator; and what was the performance against target. [56039]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Secondary Care Agency (DSCA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Major General C. G. Callow to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 2 November 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the average finished consultant episode for the Defence Secondary Care Agency (DSCA) as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the DSCA.

The estimated average finished consultant episode (FCE) for the DSCA for 1997/98 was £2580. The systems required to calculate this cost were not in place during 1996/97, the first year of the Agency's operation. Therefore, no comparable figure for that year is available. For 1997/98 the Agency was set the target of reducing the average FCE by 3% during the year. This target was not achieved. The final outturn figure for 1997/98 was 1% up on the first quarter of that year.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the ability of the Defence Secondary Care Agency to deliver the requirement to supply medically trained personnel to meet the operational needs of the commanders in chief during 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [56066]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Secondary Care Agency (DSCA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Major General C. G. Callow to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 2 November 1998:

1. I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what assessment has been made about the ability of the Defence Secondary Care Agency to deliver the requirements to supply medically trained personnel to meet the operational needs of the commanders in Chief's during 1998/99. This matter falls in my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Agency.

2. It is my Key Target One, from within the personnel resources provided to the DSCA by the single Services, to meet 100% of the Commanders in Chief's requirements for secondary care trained personnel for operational deployments. We met the target in 1997/98 and we continue to do so during 1998/99.

3. We have recognised, however, that the difficulties faced by the single Services in recruiting sufficient uniformed personnel for the Defence Medical Services will influence greatly our own ability in maintaining our Key Target one performance. Senior military and MOD staff are aware of that position and Minister of State (Armed Forces) has asked for further advice, from the Department, on a number of DMS issues.

Pilots

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RNAS personnel are currently undergoing training to become pilots. [56751]

Mr. Doug Henderson: 175 Royal Naval Air Service personnel are currently undergoing pilot training.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many fully trained pilots have requested to leave the RNAS in each of the last five years. [56753]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The number of trained Royal Navy Pilots applying for premature voluntary release in each of the last five years is as follows. Some who applied for release subsequently withdrew their applications before their due exit dates.

Year of application	Number of applications
1993–94	2
1994–95	8
1995–96	24
1996–97	22
1997–98	27

Meteorites

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the possible threat to defence satellites presented by the Leonids meteorite shower; what steps it has taken; and if he will make a statement. [56926]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) has assessed the possible damaging effects that the Leonids meteor shower could present to defence satellites. Indications are that direct impacts with the spacecraft are unlikely to penetrate its skin, but may cause some non-catastrophic erosion of its outer surfaces and solar arrays by sand-blast effect. However, electrostatic interference could introduce anomalous events within the spacecraft electronics. Since it is not possible to remove the spacecraft from the threat, actions are in hand to minimise the possibility of damage. Firstly, to reduce the risk of collision, it is intended to offset the solar arrays to present the smallest practicable cross sectional area during the period of the Leonids shower. Secondly, the operating teams will be reinforced with system experts to manage any electronic problems, and they will closely monitor the spacecraft status prior to, during and after the shower.

The actions being taken to protect defence satellites from the Leonids shower are commensurate with the risk and will themselves not interrupt military communications operations.

Beef and Lamb

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent on the purchase of British beef and lamb in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99 to date. [56488]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given in the House today, Official Report, columns 541–42, by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Kidney).

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances nuclear weapons are held as a necessary processing margin or for technical surveillance purposes. [55869]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 October 1998]: My Department always needs to hold a processing margin of nuclear weapons to ensure that the required number of weapons are always operationally available. Similarly, technical surveillance—in which weapons are periodically removed from the stockpile, stripped down and analysed—is a normal part of our nuclear weapon stewardship programme to guarantee safety, reliability, and performance.

Submarines (Radiation Alerts)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many radiation alerts there have been on Royal Navy submarines in each of the last 10 years. [57163]

Mr. Spellar: The term "radiation alert" is not a definition used in submarine operations. The lowest category of nuclear accident is defined "as an event which is likely to lead to, or has resulted in, the release of fission products from the fuel".

There has never been an accident of this nature, or by implication an accident in a higher category. In the event of an incident on board a nuclear powered submarine that causes serious concern for the safety of the reactor plant, or which is considered could result in a radiation hazard, the MOD Nuclear Accident Response Organisation would be alerted and activated. Whilst we exercise the procedures in place to deal with such an event, there has been no occasion when these have been required for a genuine incident.

Army Pilots

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army personnel are currently undergoing training to become pilots. [57189]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As at 1 October, a total of 116 Army personnel were undergoing training to become pilots.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Army and (b) RNAS pilots have completed training in each of the last five years. [57165]

Mr. Doug Henderson:

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
(a) Army pilots	37	62	58	78	80
(b) RNAS pilots	[1]33	29	37	37	24

Next Generation Light Anti-tank Weapon

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will announce the selection of bidders for the Next Generation Light Anti-Tank Weapon. [57168]

Mr. Spellar: The Next Generation Light Anti-Armour Weapon, known as NLAW, will comprise a man-portable, shoulder launched, short range light anti-armour weapon. An Invitation To Tender for the competitive Project Definition stage of the project was issued on September last year and bids have now been received from Matra BAe Dynamics UK Ltd., Bofors Anti-Armour AB and Dynamit Nobel Gmbh. These bids are currently being assessed with contract placement expected early in the new year.

Military Detention Centres

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military detention establishments there are in England and Wales; and if he will list them. [57436]

Mr. Doug Henderson: One. The Military Corrective Training Centre at Colchester is used for all three Services. The Army has in addition 24 licensed Custody Facilities which can be used for short periods of detention.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) men and (b) women were serving sentences in military detention centres in England and Wales on 1 October. [57435]

Mr. Doug Henderson: On 1 October 1998 there were (a) 139 male and (b) 2 female detainees at the Military Corrective Training Centre, Colchester which is the sole military detention centre in the UK.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current strength of the Royal Irish Regiment in Northern Ireland; how many members are (a) full-time and (b) part-time; how many full-time members have (i) resigned and (ii) joined the regiment this year; and how many part-time members have (1) resigned and (2) joined the regiment this year. [57580]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The current strength of The Royal Irish Regiment in Northern Ireland as at 30 September 1998 is 2,627 full-time, and 1,961 part-time, members.

The number of members who have resigned or given their intention to resign between 1 January and 30 September 1998 was 75 full-time and 131 part-time. Recruitment to the Regiment was 77 full-time and 131 part-time members.

Falkland Islands Garrison (Meat Purchases)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the policy of the military garrison on the Falkland Islands in relation to the country of origin of lamb and beef purchased for its use. [57469]

Mr. Spellar: The procurement of food for the Armed Forces is contracted to Booker Foodservice and this includes supply to our personnel stationed in the Falkland Islands. Our contractor is currently unable to supply British beef to any of our Armed Forces outside of the UK because of the continuing EU export ban. The beef provided is, therefore, predominantly Australian, New Zealand and Uruguayan in origin with a small amount from Brazil, Ireland and Belgium. Some 65 per cent. of the lamb supplied is sourced from New Zealand and Australia with the remainder from Uruguay.

My Department and our contractor have been working closely with farmers' representatives and the Meat and Livestock Commission since the beginning of the year to ensure that every opportunity to buy British meat at competitive prices explored. All of the beef being bought for our Forces in the UK is now British in origin, following agreement by the European Commission to allow access to stocks of British beef in intervention. We are actively pursuing opportunities to purchase British frozen lamb and this includes offering to commit to substantial forward buy to encourage competitive pricing.

Explosives (Brecon)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department will publish its report on its investigation of the removal of explosives from Army camps in the Brecon area and the subsequent explosion on 1 September 1997 in Brecon. [56373]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Board of Inquiry into the theft of explosives from the Infantry Training Centre Wales has reported. As is customary, I am withholding the report of the Inquiry itself under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. But I will write to the hon. Member with a summary of the findings of the Board.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October 1998. [57989]

Mr. Spellar: Shortly.

Surface Ships

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what budgeted receipts for the sale of Royal Navy surface ships are included within the Ministry of Defence capital receipts projections for (i) 1998–99 and (ii) 1999–2000; which ships are involved; and what are the total budgeted capital receipts. [57525]

Mr. George Robertson: Receipts for the sale of RN surface ships were forecast at £10.5 million in 1998–99 and £36.4 million in 1999–2000. The Ships concerned are as follows:

1998–99

HMS Arun

HMS Blackwater

HMS Itchen

HMS Spey

HMS Battleaxe

HMS Brazen

HMS Brilliant

1999–2000

HMS Battleaxe

HMS Brazen

HMS Brilliant

HMS Birmingham

HMS Orkney

HMS Beaver

HMS Boxer

HMS London.

The forecast for all Naval capital receipts (including the above) was £29.7 million in 1998–99 and £84.9 million in 1999–2000.

HMS Vernon

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what account he took in his consideration of bids for the HMS Vernon and Gunwharf site in Portsmouth of the contribution proposed by the bidder to the Millennium Landmark Project for Portsmouth Harbour; [57895]

(2) how much the Government received for the disposal of the HMS Vernon and Gunwharf site in Portsmouth; what was the highest bid received; and what criteria were used to select the successful bid. [57896]

Mr. Spellar: The contribution or cost of the Landmark Project, which is taken to refer to the 'Millennium Tower', had no bearing on the consideration of the bids received for the sale of the Gunwharf site.

Offers for the Gunwharf site were sought on the basis of open market value and took into account the Planning Brief for the site previously provided by Portsmouth City Council. The bid chosen was considered to provide the best value for money. I am withholding information on the details of the sale receipt under exemption 14 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Chope: To ask the President of the Council what progress has been made in ensuring millennium compliance in the systems of central Government and their agencies. [55919]

Mrs. Beckett: The results of the last quarterly review which I announced on 9 September showed that good progress is being made by departments and agencies in tackling the year 2000 problem.

The returns showed that more than half of Departments and Agencies have completed 50 per cent. or more of the necessary work on business critical systems. In a fifth of cases, this figure was higher than 90 per cent.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Council if she will publish the names of those people she has appointed to public bodies since 1 May 1997, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and whether they receive remuneration. [56788]

Cash Limits

Mr. Reed: To ask the President of the Council if she intends to make any changes to the 1998–99 cash and running costs limit for the Privy Council Office. [58112]

Mrs. Beckett: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVIII, Vote 3 will be increased by £179,000 from £2,708,000 to £2,887,000 and the gross running costs limit reduced by £374,000 from £2,734,000 to £2,360,000.

The increase is accounted for by the taking up of an amount (£179,000) under end year flexibility arrangements as foreshadowed by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36. The decrease in the gross running costs limit reflects the transfer of £553,000 to the Cabinet Office (Class XVIII, Vote 1) in respect of funding for the UK Anti Drugs Coordination Unit, as partially offset by the full take-up of end year flexibility.

The increase will be met by a charge on the Reserve, and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EU Members of Parliament

31. Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Council if she will take steps to increase support for liaison between hon. Members and members of national Parliaments of EU member states. [55912]

Mrs. Beckett: I am looking at ways of making the EU travel scheme more flexible and hope to make an announcement in due course.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Casale: To ask the President of the Council if she will publish details of her ministerial responsibilities. [56674]

Mrs. Beckett: As President of the Council, I am responsible for the work of the Privy Council Office. As Leader of the House of Commons, I uphold the rights and privileges of the House. I chair the Select Committee on the Modernisation of the House of Commons.

I am responsible for the arrangement of Government business in the Commons and for planning and supervising the Government's legislative programme. I chair the Ministerial Committees on the Queen's Speeches and Future legislation (QFL), Legislation (LEG), the Ministerial Sub-Committee on Health Strategy (HS(H)) and the Ministerial Groups on Food Safety (MISC1) and on the Millennium Date Change (MISC4). I am the Cabinet Minister responsible for overseeing preparations for addressing the Millennium bug. I also sit on a number of other Cabinet Committees and Sub-committees.

Together with the Minister for the Cabinet Office, I also act as spokesperson for the Government.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorist Organisations

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the name of each known terrorist organisation connected with terrorism in Northern Ireland indicating the number of members of each organisation (a) serving a prison sentence and (b) on remand; and if she will estimate the number from each organisation she expects to be released under the provisions of the Northern Ireland Sentences Act by (i) 30 September 1998, (ii) 31 December 1998, (iii) 31 March 1999, (iv) 30 June 1999, (v) 30 September 1999, (vi) 31 December 1999, (vii) 31 March 2000, (viii) 30 June 2000 and (ix) 30 September 2002. [55026]

Mr. Ingram: The names of each known terrorist organisation connected with terrorism in Northern Ireland, as proscribed under Emergency Provisions legislation are as follows:

The Irish Republican Army (IRA)—includes Real IRA, Provisional IRA and Continuity IRA

Cumann na mBan

Fianna na hEirann

The Red Hand Commando (RHC)

Saor Eire

The Ulster Freedom Fighters (UFF)

The Ulster Volunteer Force (UVF)

The Irish National Liberation Army (INLA)

The Irish People's Liberation Organisation (IPLO)

The Ulster Defence Association (UDA)

The Loyalist Volunteer Force (LVF)

The Continuity Army Council.

The information in respect of subsections (a) and (b) of the question is shown in Table A. This is drawn from the prison population as at 26 October 1998.

The information in respect of subsections (i) to (ix) is shown in Table B. It provides an estimate of the releases that the Secretary of State currently estimates to take place in each of the specified periods. This is drawn from information received by the Secretary of State as at 14 October 1998 from the Sentence Review Commissioners to whom prisoners apply for early release.

Information is held in relation to the perceived paramilitary association of prisoners, where applicable, for management purposes. It should be noted however, that with the exception of HMP Maze where links are more clearly defined, this information is based on a combination of factors including the offence, sympathies and associates. The figures do not include prisoners who are regarded as only having either Loyalist or Republican sympathies.

Mr. Ingram: In response to subsections (a) and (b) of this question I would refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to the previous question, subsections (a) and (b).

The information requested in subsection (c) of this question is shown in the Table. This is drawn from the prison population as at 26 October 1998. All of the prisoners in the table are serving mandatory sentences, either life imprisonment or detention during the Secretary of State's pleasure, for the offence of murder.

Terrorist Acts

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for each month in 1998 and for each police division the number of (a) arson attacks and (b) other attacks causing damage to property owned by (i) each religious denomination in Northern Ireland, (ii) Orange halls, (iii) GAA, (iv) community halls and (v) AOH halls indicating the terrorist organisation to which the police attribute each attack; and in how many cases in each group the police have failed to make any attribution. [53672]

Mr. Ingram: The following table illustrates the number of attacks on property in each police division during the period 1 January to 30 September 1998.

Totals	21	12	27	2

Note:
The RUC normally make attribution for incidents to particular groups by taking into account the physical evidence available and/or intelligence information and/or claims of responsibility. Where attribution may be determined by any of these means, it is not RUC policy to make this known except where it is specifically in the public interest to do so, for example the Omagh bombing.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for each month from January 1997 to the end of September 1998 for each RUC division the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishment shootings, indicating the numbers attributed by the RUC to (1) the Provisional IRA, (2) the INLA, (3) CAC, (4) other Republican terrorist groups, (5) the UDA, (6) the UFF, (7) the UVF, (8) the LVF and (9) other Loyalist paramilitary organisations. [53673]

Mr. Ingram: Between 1 January 1997 and 30 September 1998 there were 263 paramilitary style assaults and 130 shootings, as set out in the tables.

The RUC attribute these statistics generically to Loyalist and Republican groups. In some cases the police are unable to attribute individual attacks to a particular group. In the absence of a claim of responsibility, they can consider only the physical evidence available or intelligence information. Where attribution may be determined by any of these means, it is not RUC policy to make this known except where it is specifically in the public interest to do so.

President Clinton

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of RUC Personnel and other associated overtime due to the visit of President Clinton to Northern Ireland in September. [56656]

Mr. Ingram: The RUC manpower costs associated with President Clinton's visit amounted to approximately £1.18 million, of which £475,000 related to RUC overtime.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October 1998. [58001]

Marjorie Mowlam: Shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bankruptcy Law

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to amend the law on bankruptcy; and if he will make a statement. [56179]

Dr. Howells: When parliamentary time permits it is intended to introduce legislation to extend the power given in Section 421 of the Insolvency Act 1986 to enable the revision of the Administration of Insolvent Estates of Deceased Persons Order 1996 as well as provisions touching on the liquidation of companies and the disqualification of directors. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is developing proposals for a review of the scope for further change. The terms of this review will be announced in the Competitiveness White Paper.

Government Contracts

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the Government's Opportunities bulletin list of (a) contract notices and (b) contract awards, what factors underlie the disparity in the numbers of (a) against; and (b) where a full list of contract awards can be found. [56934]

Mr. Mandelson: Contract Notices published in the Official Journal of the European Community which are also published in Government Opportunities are required for all priority services and supplies where the estimated value is above £104,435 and for all works above £4,016,744. Contract award notices are required for all contracts issued as a result of these notices as well as for all residual services (which do not require a contract notice) where the value is in excess of £155,993. This accounts for the disparity in the number of contract notices and contract awards. There is no full central list of contract awards.

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many civil servants, expressed in full-time equivalents, are employed in his Department on issues relating to his responsibilities for the New Millennium Experience Company and its activities. [57018]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 October 1998]: Policy responsibility for the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has remained with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS). Twelve officials within DCMS support my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport and me on issues relating to the Millennium celebrations including the Millennium Experience.

Fraudulent Invention Promoters

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he plans to take in relation to the activities in the United Kingdom of fraudulent invention promoters. [57075]

Dr. Howells: I am aware of concerns about the commercial activities in the United Kingdom of companies which offer to develop and promote inventions internationally.

However, I am not aware of any evidence that any company engaged in this type of business is acting fraudulently.

Should any evidence be drawn to my attention I shall ask for it to be passed to those authorities responsible for investigating allegations of fraud.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the likely impact on British competitiveness of the Working Time Directive. [56912]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 28 October 1998]: An assessment of costs and benefits of the Working Time Directive was made, a copy of which is held in the Library of the House.

Any cost of implementing the Regulations needs to be compared with the benefits of helping to combat stress and absenteeism by ensuring workers receive proper rest. The CBI estimate up to £25 billion was lost in 1996 due to absenteeism. This unregulated absenteeism can damage the productivity of the workforce and the competitiveness of British industry.

Football Televising

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the Office of Fair Trading regarding the Restrictive Practices Court inquiry into the televising of Premiership football being held in January 1999. [57112]

Dr. Howells: None. The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has no role in the process of referral to the Restrictive Practices Court of agreements containing significant restrictions on competition. That is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. Nor does the Secretary of State have any role in decisions taken by the Court.

Chile

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the number of British jobs dependent upon trade between the United Kingdom and Chile. [56570]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 28 October 1998]: UK trade in goods with Chile during 1997 totalled nearly £600,000. Both exports and imports were spread across a wide range of sectors, with machinery of various types heading UK exports and non-ferrous metals being Chile's main export. However, no figures are available showing the number of jobs in the UK dependent on trade with Chile.

Latin America

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in respect of which Latin American country his Department has appointed export promoters; and if he will list individually the total expenditure each incurred in the financial year 1997–98 and their individual budgets for the financial year 1998–99. [57027]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 28 October 1998]: My Department currently has appointed Export Promoters for Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay.

The financial figures requested are as follows (rounded up):

	1997–98 expenditure	1998–99 budgets
Argentina/Chile/Uruguay/Paraguay	77,000	62,000
Brazil	76,000	140,000
Mexico	64,000	67,000
Peru	nil	42,000

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the budgets he has allocated in the financial year 1998–99 to each country under his Department's Link into Latin America trade programme. [57026]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 28 October 1998]: In 1998–99, the countries covered by the 'Link into Latin America' campaign have been allocated a total promotional budget of £780,000. This includes a budget of £440,000 for a targeted export initiative for Brazil, in the context of Mercosur, arising out of the recommendations of the 1997 Export Forum report. The remainder of the budget is spread across multi-country events and other market specific activities. In addition, the Department provides support for activities such as trade missions to and overseas trade fairs in Latin America through a range of other more general schemes.

Silver (Lion Mark)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 19 October 1998, Official Report, columns 1048–49, on silver, if imported silver will be permitted to be submitted to assay offices for the lion stamp; and what the legal and commercial status of the lion stamp will be. [57454]

Dr. Howells: It is proposed that, following amendment of the Hallmarking Act 1973, articles made of imported silver which are submitted to United Kingdom Assay Offices could be struck with the lion symbol. However, only those articles which met the same standards required of products made in the UK could be struck with the lion symbol or any of the other traditional pictorial symbols. The legal status of the lion symbol will remain unchanged in that it will continue to indicate a specific standard of fineness (sterling) for articles made of silver. Since the standards applicable to such articles will remain unchanged after the implementation of the amendments to the Act, I do not consider that the status of the lion symbol will be in any way diminished.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he was first informed of the arrest of Senator Pinochet. [57431]

Mr. Mandelson: I read of the arrest of Senator Pinochet in the press on Saturday 17 October.

Cash Limits

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes will be made to the cash and running costs limits for 1998–99 for (a) his Department, (b) the Office of Fair Trading, (c) the Office of Telecommunications and (d) the Office of Electricity Regulation. [58093]

Mr. Mandelson: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates:

(i) the cash limit for class V vote 1—Department of Trade and Industry: programmes and administration—will be increased by £18,683,000 from £1,268,190,000 to £1,286,873,000. This net increase results from:

(a) the take up of running costs and capital end year flexibility (£18,830,000) as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36;

(b) an adjustment of £303,000 in respect of capital charge adjustments incorrectly attributed to DTI, which should have been attributed to OFGAS (Class V Vote 9); offset by:

(c) a transfer of £450,000 to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Class VI Vote 5) to cover the costs of a new service in respect of the Health and Safety Executive's enforcement of the Working Time regulations and the capital requirements of the Government Offices.

Within this total, the gross running costs limit for the Department of Trade and Industry will be increased by £11,069,000 from £349,172,000 to £360,241,000. This change comprises the take up of running costs end year flexibility and the adjustment to the running costs limit consequential on the re-attribution of the capital charges to OFGAS.

The take up of the Department's running costs and the capital end year flexibility (£18,830,000) will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure;

(ii) the cash limit for Class V Vote 2—Department of Trade and Industry: science—will be increased by £30,000,000 from £1,338,497,000 to £1,368,497,000. This net increase results from:

(a) the partial take-up of capital end year flexibility (£5,000,000) as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36;

(b) additional provision amounting to £25,000,000 covering the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council's subscription to CERN for work on the Large Hadron Collider Programme, the increase of student stipends from various Research Councils, contributions to the set-up costs of new programmes at the Medical Research Council, and increased provision for the Swindon Research Councils Pension Scheme.

Both these increases will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure;

(iii) the cash limit for Class V Vote 7—Office of Fair Trading—will be increased by £2,361,000 from £21,731,000 to £24,092,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £1,640,000 from £19,301,000 to £20,941,000. These changes reflect the extra resources required to meet commitments carried forward from 1997–98, to carry forward projects which were planned in previous years but not completed, and to undertake work on the new competition legislation. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure;

(iv) the cash limit for Class V Vote 8—Office of Telecommunications—will be increased by a nominal £1,000 from £1,000 to £2,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £481,000 from £10,468,000 to £10,949,000. These changes, which include additional capital provision of £921,000, reflect the extra resources required to cover the cost of implementing the review of OFTEL's organisational structure and give effect to the end year flexibility carry forward of £139,000 on running costs announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 4 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36. Although there will be an offsetting increase of £1,401,000 in additional appropriations in aid, the token net increase of £1,000 will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure;

(v) the cash limit for Class V Vote 10—the Office of Electricity Regulation—will be increased by £939,000 from £1,000 to £940,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £1,800,000 from £20,000,000 to £21,800,000. These increases reflect the additional resources required by the Director General of Electricity Supply for the engagement of consultants to assist in preparing for the review of electricity trading arrangements and for additional staff to strengthen regulatory capabilities as well as additional capital expenditure amounting to £244,000 for computer equipment for new staff and for projects connected with the review of electricity trading arrangements. Part of this increase will be offset by an additional £1,105,000 in appropriations in aid as a result of increased electricity licence fees. The balance of £939,000 will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Late Payment Directive

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the EU Directive on Late Payment will require revision to the Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act 1998. [57541]

Mrs. Roche: The Government are working closely with the European Commission and other Member States to ensure that small businesses are paid promptly in both domestic and European markets.

The contents of the proposed EU Directive are still the subject of discussions between the European Parliament, the European Commission and Member States. Until these discussions are completed, it is not possible to predict what effect it will have on our own late payment legislation.

Manchester United

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reference he has made to the Office of Fair Trading concerning BSkyB's bid for Manchester United; and if he will make a statement. [57514]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 29 October that he had decided, in accordance with the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading, to refer the proposed acquisition of Manchester United plc by British Sky Broadcasting Group plc to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received from (a) the public and (b) institutions concerning BSkyB's proposed takeover of Manchester United. [57516]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has received some 200 representations and petitions concerning BSkyB's proposed acquisition of Manchester United. The great majority of these were from individual members of the public.

Artists' Resale Rights

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on Droit de Suite for artists and writers. [57921]

Dr. Howells: The Government are concerned that the Commission's proposal for a Directive to harmonise artists' resale right (droit de suite) could drive Europe's international art market offshore with the loss of thousands of jobs without bringing any significant benefit to artists. UK auctioneers and dealers, alone, stand to lose fees of up to £68 million per annum and up to 5,000 jobs. The Government, therefore, will continue robustly to oppose the proposal.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October 1998. [57990]

Mr. Mandelson: Shortly.

Copyright

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to extend copyright to electronically stored information; and if he will make a statement. [57876]

Dr. Howells: United Kingdom copyright law (the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 (1988 c. 48)) already includes material stored by electronic means. The UK is supporting work at EU and international level to ensure that similar protection applies in other countries. The proposed EC Directive on Copyright and Related Rights in the Information Society would establish this across the EU, and we are pressing for early agreement on this Directive.

Mock Auctions

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to bring forward proposals to protect consumers who attend one-day sales and mock auctions. [57770]

Dr. Howells: The problems consumers experience at one-day sales and mock auctions are currently being investigated by this Department and the Office of Fair Trading in co-operation with the Trading Standards Organisations with a view to proposals being ready by the end of the year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Religious Persecution

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what provisions exist for the recording of the incidence of offences motivated by hostility based on the victim's membership of a religious group; [56840]

(2) what guidance he has given to the police and the Crown Prosecution Service regarding assaults and other offences motivated by hostility based on the victim's membership of a religious group; [56839]

(3) what is his assessment of the prevalence of assaults and other offences motivated by hostility based on the victim's membership of a religious group. [56838]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As my right hon. Friend made clear during the report stage of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, on 23 June 1998, Official Report, column 892, we believe that most—possibly almost all—cases of assault, and other offences, which appear to have a religious element will also have a racial element.

Whilst there is no specific procedure for recording religiously motivated crime, the police, under the racial incidents monitoring scheme, will record any incident in which it appears to the investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any other person.

The Code of Practice for Crown prosecutors states that, provided there is sufficient evidence to prosecute, there will be a public interest factor in favour of prosecution where the offence was motivated by any form of discrimination against the victim, including where the offence was motivated by discrimination against the victim's religious beliefs. In addition, the Crown Prosecution Service has issued guidance to its staff on the racially aggravated offences contained in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Home Office guidance to the police on these offences also refers to religiously motivated crime. A copy of that guidance will be placed in the Library.

We undertook during the passage of the Crime and Disorder Act to monitor the effectiveness of the racially aggravated offences. In addition, the Home Office is commissioning research into the nature and extent of religious discrimination in England and Wales.

Asylum Seekers

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct his officials to cease to certify asylum claims under section 1 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996, solely on the basis of the asylum seeker's country of origin. [56463]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We plan to abolish the "White List" provision when the opportunity for legislation arises but, in the meantime, we shall continue to operate it subject to due scrutiny of the circumstances of individual cases and the continuing review of conditions in the countries of origin of asylum seekers, as explained in paragraph 9.10 of the White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—A Modern Approach to Immigration and Asylum" (Cm 4018).

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the European Parliament's proposal to change the European Convention protocol on asylum seekers to provide for temporary asylum. [57473]

Kate Hoey: The Government accept that there would be benefits in member states co-ordinating their response in the event of a future mass influx of displaced persons, but we have some concerns about the Commission's proposal. These concerns centre on its general inflexibility, and in particular the restrictions on member states acting differentially or independently while a particular regime is in force. These issues are still under discussion in the relevant European Union fora.

Immigration

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to implement his policy, set out in the White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer" towards people from abroad whose marriages break down within one year due to domestic violence. [56462]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The details of this concession are still being finalised. I shall make an announcement when this work has been completed.

Police Dogs

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instigate measures to ensure the highest standards of welfare for police dogs under training. [56957]

Mr. Boateng: I am of course concerned that police dogs undergoing training should be provided with the highest standards of welfare and I am assured that this is provided in the majority of cases.

All general-purpose police dogs should be trained along the lines set out in the Home Office Police Dog Training and Care Manual, which emphasises that training should be based on 'Praise and Reward'. The manual explains the need for self control on the part of the handler and stipulates that 'a handler should never resort to physical punishment in training the dog'.

I understand that all police forces have access to an independent veterinary officer. Some forces have recently received visits from both the RSPCA and the National Canine Defence League, who were given full access to all training facilities.

A number of forces entertain visitors to their premises, or hold open days, when visitors may see dogs being trained first hand.

I am unable to comment on the court case involving police officers from Essex Police which is sub judice.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department has issued on action required under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 by (a) the police and (b) other authorities on domestic violence. [56953]

Mr. Boateng: The Act requires local authorities and the police to work together in partnership with other agencies and the community to conduct local crime and disorder audits, and to develop and implement strategies for reducing crime and disorder in their area.

Domestic violence features significantly in a number of areas in England and Wales. We have therefore stressed in Home Office "Guidance on Statutory Crime and Disorder Partnerships", at paragraph 1.50, that we expect local crime and disorder partnerships to identify the level of domestic violence in their area and to develop and implement strategies for reducing it.

The guidance points out that partnerships should work together with any existing inter-agency domestic violence forum in their area, and states that we expect both the police and local authorities to consider how to co-operate locally with interested parties.

A copy of the guidance is in the Library, and it is also available on the Home Office website: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/cdact/index.htm.

Fraudulent Invention Promoters

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action police fraud specialists are taking in respect of the activities in the United Kingdom of fraudulent invention promoters. [57076]

Mr. Boateng: Fraud is a criminal offence and the police investigate all complaints of this nature that are put to them.

I am not aware of any inquiries currently being undertaken by central fraud squads into fraudulent invention promoters. Should evidence of criminal activity by such companies be drawn to the attention of the police, they will be investigated fully.

Prison Service

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what policies the Prison Service has adopted with regard to the provision of facilities to assist disabled people to visit prisoners. [57335]

Mr. George Howarth: The provision of facilities for visitors is the responsibility of each establishment. The Prison Service has advised governors that, in considering the facilities which should be made available locally, the conditions in which visits take place, and the treatment of visitors, are no less important than the number and length of visits. The specific facilities which are available to assist disabled people to visit prisoners throughout England and Wales are being reviewed as part of the implementation of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, in accordance with the Government's implementation timetable.

Entry Visas

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many nationals of (a) Morocco, (b) Mozambique, (c) Nepal, (d) Pakistan, (e) Peru, (f) the Philippines and (g) Romania applied for entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom for temporary purposes, including visitor and student applications, in (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996 and (iv) 1997; how many visas were issued for temporary purposes; how many recipients of those visas returned to their country of nationality before their visa expired, based on information collected centrally and locally; and how many applied to remain permanently in the United Kingdom or for political asylum; [57322]

Kate Hoey: The available information is given in the tables.

Entry clearance data are available by country of application only, which is not necessarily the country of the applicant's nationality. There were no entry clearance issuing posts in Afghanistan, Albania, Benin, Bhutan, Burundi, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Djibouti, Eritrea, Gabon, Haiti, Iraq, Laos, Liberia, Maldives, Moldova, Rwanda or Somalia in 1994–1997 and residents of those countries have to apply elsewhere.

No data are available on the numbers of persons who return to their country of nationality before their leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom expires.

Information is not available on the number of holders of visas for temporary purposes who apply for asylum or for settlement. The information in Table 2 on grants of settlement includes persons who entered the United Kingdom with a settlement entry clearance; and the data on asylum applications include persons who held no entry clearance.

Immigration Holding Centres

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what submissions he has made to the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detentions on the working of UK immigration holding centres. [57187]

Kate Hoey: No submissions were made. The United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention visited the United Kingdom during the week commencing 21 September 1998 to find out more about the United Kingdom's policy and practice on the detention of asylum seekers. The Group will report back to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights next spring. It is the Government's policy to co-operate fully with all of the Commission on Human Rights' independent monitoring mechanisms.

Pit Ponies

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning the use of pit ponies in the UK. [57160]

Mr. George Howarth: The Department has received a letter and petition from the Fforest Uchaf Horse and Pony Rehabilitation Centre. A reply was sent by my officials on 30 October 1998.

The Coal and Other Mines (Horses) Regulations 1956 set out the requirements about the use of horses and ponies in mines. The Mines Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive, which is responsible for enforcing the legislation, say that they have found no evidence of the maltreatment of any horses and ponies used in mines.

Standard Spending Assessment (Fire Component)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken and what progress has been made by his Department in addressing the concerns of fire authorities about the aspect of the fire calls element of the standard spending assessment known as the perverse incentive. [57046]

Mr. George Howarth: The fire service standard spending assessment formula has been considered each year by a Standard Spending Assessment Sub-group, chaired by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The local authority representatives on the Sub-group have not themselves this year initiated any proposals for changes to the indicator for fire, false alarm and certain special service calls in the fire service formula. However, the Home Office and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions have put forward options which would amend the basis of calculation and thereby reduce the volatility of the indicator. Decisions on the formula for 1999–2000 will be announced later this year.

We are committed to a fair distribution of grants to local authorities. This is why the Government are, in partnership with local government, establishing a three year programme of research to examine whether there is a better way of determining the distribution of revenue support grant than the present arrangement for standard spending assessments.

UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for Her Majesty's Government to accede to the First Optional Protocol to the United Nations Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. [57410]

Kate Hoey: The Government announced on 3 July 1997, Official Report, column 221, that they intended to review the United Kingdom's position under various international instruments. This includes whether to accept the right of individuals to submit complaints to the United Nations Human Rights Committee under the First Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. We expect the review to be completed by the end of the year.

Mohammed Rasul Khan

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the application for leave to remain by Mohammed Rasul Khan, reference K350692, will be determined. [57309]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The application, which was received on 12 October and validated on 28 October, has been considered and officials will shortly be writing to Mr. Khan saying that it has been granted.

Young Prisoners

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children aged 15 years or below are currently being held in prison. [57637]

Mr. George Howarth: Provisional information shows that there were 203 persons aged 15 years in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales on 30 September 1998.

On that date, there were also 44 young people held under a secure training order—a sentence for persistent offenders aged 12–14 years on conviction—who serve the custodial part of their sentence in a secure training centre or in local authority secure accommodation but not in Prison Service establishments.

Other persons aged under 15 years are remanded to local authority accommodation. Information about these is published in a Department of Health publication entitled "Children accommodated in secure units" (reference A/F 97/21). This information is presented on a financial year basis, with the last report covering the year ending 31 March 1997.

Parenting Orders

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements his Department has made to monitor the effect of parenting orders. [57638]

Mr. Boateng: Pilot schemes have been set up in nine different areas. These were announced on 3 June 1998, Official Report, column 219.

The pilots will help to identify good practice in implementing a number of the new youth justice measures contained in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, including the parenting order. The pilots began on 30 September and will run for 18 months.

The pilot schemes are being evaluated by a team of researchers form Sheffield University. The evaluation will provide information about the use of the parenting order, the outcomes of the order and practice in delivering and supervising the order.

Development Land (Sale)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the Metropolitan Police's procedures are in respect of local consultation when proposing to sell open land for development. [57545]

Kate Hoey: The Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District tells me that, like other land owners, he looks to planning procedures to provide appropriate local consultation for the development of land that he intends to sell.

Metropolitan Police (Land Sale, Wanstead)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure (a) that the Metropolitan Police consult local residents about their proposed sale of land in Wanstead and (b) that the land remains open land. [57546]

Kate Hoey: The Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District tells me that the Metropolitan Police are disposing of the land at 23–30 Wanstead High Street, not developing it. As such, it is for the new owners of the land to undertake any appropriate local consultation for their planned development.

Although there has been no formal consultation with local residents, representatives of the Metropolitan Police met a delegation of local residents in August who were protesting about the proposed sale of the land, which is an enclosed site where two houses have been demolished. They explained the reasons for selling the site, and listened to the residents' concerns. A local public inquiry, into the application for a mixed development of shops and flats, is due to be held on 1 December this year, when a planning inspector will hear objections, from local residents and others, before making a recommendation to the Secretary of State.

The use to which the land is put, including making it an open public space, will throughout be subject to planning permission.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 21 September on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Biswas. [57527]

Kate Hoey: The Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), wrote to the right hon. Member on 30 October 1998.

Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), of 10 August on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Patrick. [57538]

Kate Hoey: My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State replied to the right hon. Member on 28 October 1998. He regrets the delay in doing so.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 19 August, on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Davidson. [57537]

Kate Hoey: My right hon. Friend hopes to be in a position to respond to the right hon. Member shortly.

Obscene Publications

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of legislation relating to obscene publications. [56096]

Mr. Boateng: The Obscene Publications Act 1959, as amended, has shown itself capable of reflecting changing standards and of adapting to developments in technology. The Government are determined to ensure that the criminal law is effective in protecting people from harmful material and, with this in mind, keep the legislation under review.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been convicted under the Obscene Publications Act 1959, for publishing obscene literature, in the last year for which figures are available. [56098]

Mr. Boateng: Provisional data for 1997 show that 189 offenders were convicted in England and Wales under section 2 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 as amended by section 1(1) of the Obscene Publications Act 1964. Information on the type of obscene matter (book, magazine, Internet etc.) used for such an offence is not collected centrally.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to prevent obscene publications from reaching young people. [56099]

Mr. Boateng: The Government are determined to protect young people from potentially obscene material by ensuring the effectiveness of the existing law.

All publications—including material available via the Internet—are subject to the Obscene Publications Act 1959, which makes it a criminal offence to publish an obscene article; that is, an article which in the view of the court has a tendency to 'deprave and corrupt' those likely to read, see or hear it. In the first instance, it is the responsibility of the police to decide whether there are sufficient grounds to launch a criminal investigation, and that of the Crown Prosecution Service to decide whether to prosecute those alleged to be responsible for the publication.

In respect of material which is not potentially obscene but which may, nevertheless, be unsuitable for young people, the Government support non-statutory schemes, such as the voluntary Code of Practice under which newsagents refuse to sell 'adult' magazines to persons under the age of 18, and the Teenage Magazine Arbitration Panel which oversees a binding set of guidelines on how editors of teenage magazines should deal with sexual matters.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role of the police in investigating the publication of obscene literature. [56100]

Mr. Boateng: Under the Obscene Publications Act 1959, it is the responsibility of the police in individual cases to decide whether there are sufficient grounds to launch a criminal investigation, and that of the Crown Prosecution Service to decide whether to prosecute those alleged to be responsible for the publication.

Under section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959, the police are also granted certain powers of search and seizure with respect to obscene articles.

Three police forces have units dedicated to the investigation of obscene publications: the Metropolitan Police Service; Greater Manchester police; and West Midlands police. These units investigate the production and distribution of pornography, including pornography on the Internet, supervise licensed and unlicensed sex shops, supervise divisional obscene publication cases and provide advice in relation to obscene publication matters to other forces. Police operations are increasingly targeting mail order and duplicating premises in order to tackle the problem at source.

Children's Literature (Classification)

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a body to classify the suitability of literature for children in the same way as films are classified. [56097]

Mr. Boateng: The Government recognise the importance of protecting children from unsuitable material. The criminal law, booksellers, publishers and parents all have a part to play. The criminal law, through legislation such as the Obscene Publications Act 1959 and the Children and Young Persons (Harmful Publications) Act 1955, protects children from material which is likely to deprave or corrupt them. Responsible booksellers generally place children's books in a designated area within the store, thus reducing the possibility that children—or their carers—would seek to purchase age-unsuitable material. In addition, publishers of teenage magazines have developed a binding set of guidelines dealing with the portrayal of sexual matters. It is also a responsibility of parents to guide their children's reading and to guard against their exposure to unsuitable material.

The Government believe that this offers the best approach and that the establishment of a body to classify works of literature would be likely to pose immense practical problems, given the number of such works which are available and which are produced each year.

Cash Limits

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for changes to the 1998–99 cash and running costs limits within his responsibilities. [58109]

Mr. Straw: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary token Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class VII, Vote 1 (Home Office administration, police probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) will be reduced by £2,588,000 from £4,836,378,000 to £4,833,351,000 and the running costs limit inside the control total will be increased by £3,981,000 from £1,883,450,000 to £1,887,431,000.

The changes in the cash limit are the net effect of the following transfers: £193,000 from the Cabinet Office, Class XVIII, Vote 2 in relation to Communications Electronics Security Group charges; £1,153,000 to the Crown Prosecution Service, Class VIII, Vote 4 and £1,648,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department Class VIII, Vote 1 in respect of costs relating to the Crime and Disorder Act; £14,000 to the Scottish Office, Class XIII, Vote 5 and £4,000 to the Northern Ireland Office, Class XV, Vote 1 in respect of the European Year Against Racism. The Supplementary Estimate will also cover transfer of responsibility for the Freedom of Information Unit from the Cabinet Office, Class XVII, Vote 1.

The increase in the running costs limit is the net effect of payments of £3,500,000 from the Metropolitan Police, £442,000 from the Cabinet Office, £95,000 from the Welsh Office for information services and from the Northern Ireland Office for legal services and £39,000 from the Lord Chancellor's Department.

The increases will be offset by transfers and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Persistent Young Offenders

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of (a) those dealt with by the youth court and (b) all juvenile offenders fall within the definition of persistent young offenders. [57512]

Mr. Boateng: Specific figures are not available for the number of persistent young offenders dealt with in the youth court. However, in 1997 in England and Wales a total of 79,151 persons (provisional figures) aged 10 to 17 were found guilty of offences in magistrates' courts and the Crown Court combined—including the youth court. Also, an exercise carried out in 1997 to establish the average length of time taken to deal with persistent young offenders from arrest to sentence identified a total of 16,090 occasions on which persistent young offenders were dealt with. Taken together, these figures, which are on a broadly comparable basis, suggest that persistent young offenders account for 20 per cent. of occasions on which young offenders were dealt with by the courts in 1997.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the basis and methodology of the calculation of the benchmark figure of 142 days, against which progress to halve the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders will be measured; what progress has been made to date; and what definition will apply of persistent young offenders. [57513]

Mr. Boateng: The calculation for the baseline figure of 142 was based on a representative sample of almost 1,500 occasions during 1996, at which slightly over 900 persistent young offenders were sentenced for almost 4,500 offences across England and Wales. The dates on which the sampled persistent young offenders were sentenced were obtained from the Police National Computer, Phoenix. Because Phoenix does not generally hold information on arrest dates, arrest dates were surveyed directly from police forces. For offences where there was no arrest, dates of laying of information were collected instead. The arrest to sentence time for each occasion on which a persistent young offender was sentenced was then calculated as follows. The date of arrest for the sentencing occasion was defined as the earliest date of arrest (or date of laying information where there was no arrest) related to the offences for which a sentence was passed. The time from arrest to sentence is then the difference (in calendar days) between the date of sentence and the date of arrest. The national baseline was calculated as the mean arrest to sentence time for the sampled sentencing occasions.

The data for 1997 show signs of improvement. The annual figure for 1997 as a whole shows a reduction to 141 days, while improvements from 1 May 1997 reduced the average time to 138 days. To monitor progress towards the pledge the Government have put systems in place to produce regular data on the time between arrest and sentence for persistent young offenders. These will produce usable data from late 1999.

The Government have asked all youth courts to set up fast-tracking schemes for persistent young offenders, and last month set demanding performance targets for all stages up to and after trial. The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 will also enable statutory time limits to be set in cases involving young offenders.

A persistent young offender is defined as a young person who has been sentenced on three or more separate occasions by any criminal court in the United Kingdom for one or more recordable offences, and within three years of the last sentencing occasion is subsequently arrested or has an information laid against him for a further recordable offence.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October. [57995]

Mr. Straw: Shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate his Department has made of the total level of fraud in the payment of incapacity benefit; [55936]

(2) how much fraud has been detected in the payment of incapacity benefit in each of the last three years. [55942]

Mr. Denham: Tackling fraud and abuse is a top priority for the Government. Operational issues are the responsibility of Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Gordon Marsden, dated 28 October 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the total level of fraud in the payment of Incapacity Benefit (IB) and how much fraud has been detected in the payment of IB in each of the last three years.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Benefits Agency's (BA's) Benefit Review Programme aims to estimate how much benefit is being paid incorrectly, including fraud and establish causes of incorrect payments. To date Benefit Reviews have been carried out on Income Support (twice), Unemployment Benefit, Housing Benefit (twice), Retirement Pension, Invalid Care Allowance, Disability Living Allowance and Child Benefit/Child Benefit (Lone Parent), but not on IB. Consequently, no formal assessment of the level of fraud in IB is currently available.

Information about the amount of fraud detected in individual benefits has only been separately collected since April 1997. In 1997–98 the BA saved a total of £1,918 million as a result of anti-fraud activity. Savings to IB comprised £7.4 million (or 0.4%) of this total figure.

However, there is a difference in the level of fraud detected by investigative work and the level of fraud estimated by the Benefit Review programme. Benefit Reviews estimate the total amount of incorrectness, including fraud, within a particular benefit. A random, but statistically valid, sample of customers is selected and a review of their circumstances is carried out. Therefore, whilst savings figures from investigations demonstrate what fraud has actually been detected, Benefit Reviews estimate the levels of fraud and incorrectness in the benefits reviewed.

The BA is undertaking a range of projects and initiatives all of which are designed to achieve a sustained reduction in the level of fraud across the benefit system. The Government's recent Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future" sets out a comprehensive strategy for tackling fraud in the wider context of welfare reform.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who are currently waiting to attend an incapacity benefit appeal tribunal in the West Midlands have been waiting (a) one month, (b) two months, (c) three months and (d) six months and over. [57058]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the form requested. However, at the end of June 1998, the number of people waiting to attend an Incapacity Benefit Appeal Tribunal lodged with the Birmingham local office of The Independent Tribunal Service, totalled 2,498. Of these, 213 have been waiting less than one month, 870 between one and three months, 540 between three and six months and 875 over six months.

Pensions

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of equalising retirement benefits for United Kingdom state pensioners resident in other countries. [55802]

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners, with United Kingdom pension rights, living abroad have had their pensions frozen; and if he will estimate the cost of upgrading these pensions. [56227]

Mr. Denham: Around 450,000 pensioners living abroad receive a basic UK State Pension which is frozen, either at the rate paid on leaving the UK or, if already living abroad, at the rate when first awarded.

The total annual cost of uprating frozen UK basic State Pensions paid overseas to the rate paid to pensioners resident in the UK would be £275 million.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Pensions Review will examine the pension claims of those pensioners living abroad. [56228]

Mr. Denham: The Pensions Review has received a number of representations from pensioners and organisations representing pensioners who live in countries where basic UK pension rates are not uprated in line with pensions paid in the UK.

As there are competing demands and constraints on Social Security spending in the United Kingdom, it would be wrong to raise expectations that uprating UK pensions paid abroad is likely to attract priority in the current circumstances.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners with United Kingdom pension rights are currently living abroad. [56230]

Mr. Denham: Around 840,000 pensioners living abroad receive a United Kingdom basic State Pension.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 25, on pensioner incomes, by what means hon. Members may obtain statistical information on the incomes of pensioners prior to 1979. [57660]

Mr. Denham: The Department's Pensioners' Incomes Series datasets start with 1979. Consistent datasets for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The Department does hold a copy of the Households Below Average Income 1961 to 1991 dataset created by the Institute for Fiscal Studies. It has not been used to analyse pensioners incomes. It is Government Statistical Service practice to use only datasets created within Government Departments or under the direction of Government analysts for answering questions that require fresh analysis.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the date of publication of the Pensions Review. [56229]

Mr. Denham: As set out in the Green Paper "New Ambitions for our country: A New Contract for Welfare" (Cm 3805), we will publish a Green Paper on pensions later this year. There will then be a period of further consultation before final proposals are developed.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many asylum seekers are currently claiming benefit in the United Kingdom; from which countries they came; and how much benefit they are being paid each month. [55872]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table. There is an overlap in the figures provided as most claimants receive both Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Numbers and average monthly amounts of benefit paid to an asylum seeker in May 1997

Benefit	Number of recipients	Average monthly amount of benefit (£)
Income Support	45,000	255.90
Housing Benefit	36,000	356.90
Council Tax Benefit	21,000	42.00

Notes:

1. The number of recipients are rounded to the nearest thousand; average amounts to the nearest 10 pence.
2. The average monthly amount of benefit is calculated by multiplying the average weekly amount by 52 and dividing by 12.
3. Asylum seekers cannot be distinguished from other urgent case payments.
4. Information refers to benefit units, which may be a single person or a couple.
5. Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit figures relate only to those claimants also in receipt of Income Support.
6. A later approximate figure of 42,000 asylum seekers claiming Income Support is available, from the February 1998 QSE. However, the May 1997 figure has been used in table to ensure the data are comparable with the Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit data.

Sources:

1. Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, 5 per cent. sample, May 1997.
2. Housing Benefit Management Information System, annual 1 per cent. sample of claimants also in receipt of Income Support, May 1997.

A breakdown of asylum seekers currently claiming benefit by country of origin is not available. However, copies of the Home Office monthly asylum statistics and Home Office Statistical Bulletins, which show the rate of asylum applications by country, are placed in the Library.

Policy Proposals (Quality of Life)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what methods of measurements and from what base lines his Department employs in assessing the quality of life implications of policy proposals; and how these were selected. [55769]

Mr. Denham: This Department uses a range of measures to assess policy proposals and their implications for both customers and staff. The methods of measurement and base lines are selected as appropriate in the context, and in accordance with relevant guidance from HM Treasury and other Government Departments. Most social research projects commissioned by the Department are concerned, directly or indirectly, with collecting data on quality of life. Examples include routine monitoring through customer satisfaction surveys and the Family Resources Survey, as well as specific evaluations of national programmes and pilot studies to test new initiatives.

Benefit Appeals

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals relating to (a) incapacity benefits, (b) income support and (c) severe disablement allowance determined by social security appeal tribunals concerned the all work test for incapacity for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98; what proportion of the appeals in each benefit category for these years related to the all work test; what proportion of all work test appeals in each benefit category for these years were determined without a oral hearing; and in how many all work test appeals for these years the claimant was at least partially successful, in (1) appeals determined after an oral hearing and (2) appeals determined without such a hearing. [55746]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to reply to the letter of 5 October 1998 from the hon. Member for Totnes concerning Mrs. Sally Williams of 3 Icy Park, Aveton Gifford, Kingsbridge, Devon. [55873]

Angela Eagle: A substantive reply was sent to the hon. Member for Totnes on 30 October 1998.

Income Support

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on Regulation 53(1) of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987; and what plans he has to revise this calculation. [56288]

Angela Eagle: The notional (tariff) income from capital in Regulation 53(1) of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 reflects an expectation that people with more substantial savings can make some contribution towards their living expenses from those savings. The tariff is currently applied if a person has over £3,000 in capital, unless they are in a residential care or nursing home, or in certain types of residential accommodation, in which case it is applied only on savings over £10,000. For each £250 of capital above £3,000, but below the upper limit of £16,000, £1 per week is taken into account as income. This formula, which does not represent any assumed rate of interest, avoids the many practical difficulties that would arise if actual income were taken into account. We have no plans to revise this calculation. However, we continue to review the benefit rules as part of our commitment to modernise the Social Security system.

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants have been (a) denied and (b) disallowed disability living allowance in the first six months of 1998; and how many of these were awarded the benefit at appeal. [57043]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in receipt of disability living allowance pay tax at the (a) basic and (b) higher rate. [57704]

Mr. Timms: Our latest estimate is that there are around 120,000 current recipients of Disability Living Allowance paying tax at the 20 per cent. rate, 110,000 recipients paying tax at the 23 per cent. or basic rate, and 10,000 recipients paying tax at the 40 per cent. or higher rate. These estimates are based on survey information and are subject to margins of error. The tax rates refer to the highest marginal rates of income tax the recipient is liable to pay.

Child Benefit

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of non-payment of child benefit to children in residential or foster care. [57636]

Angela Eagle: None.

Child Benefit is paid to a person responsible for a child as a contribution from the State towards the cost of bringing up that child. When a child's accommodation and maintenance is provided by a local authority, to avoid double provision Child Benefit and any linked entitlement to a child dependency addition cease after the first eight weeks. If the child returns home for at least a week, or for two nights a week or more on a regular basis, entitlement is regained.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost to his Department of welfare payments paid to (a) a single person and (b) a married man with two dependants who has been made redundant in the last years for which figures are available. [57507]

Notes:

1. Expenditure estimates for the individual group are a combination of sample benefit data and DSS expenditure estimates for 1997–98. Estimates of expenditure of Housing Benefit/Council Tax Benefit for those who are not claiming Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) are not included.
2. We are unable to provide figures on married men with dependants for JSA (C) as dependants' details are not always collected. As such, the figure provided represents all men with partners.
3. It is not possible to identify the sex of a claimant on Housing Benefit/Council Tax and therefore figures provided represent recipients who have a partner and two dependants.
4. We are unable to identify claimants that have been made redundant as this information is not recorded on the source system.
5. Figures are rounded to the nearest million pounds.
6. There is an overlap in the figures provided as most claimants receive both Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.
7. Council Tax/Housing Benefit figures exclude JSA claimants receiving nil benefit.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October. [57991]

Mr. Timms: Shortly.

Disabled People

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disabled people will be assisted into work under the pilot projects accepted under the first round of bids under the New Deal for Disabled People. [57707]

Mr. Timms: The New Deal for Disabled People involves two strands of pilots. The Innovative Scheme strand aims to test ways to help people with a disability or long-term illness, and carers, to move into or remain in work. Through different schemes which deal with a range of disabilities and medical conditions we will learn what works effectively and what is less effective. The ten schemes being funded under the first bidding exercise aim to help around 875 people to move into or remain in work. Further contracts will be announced next year.

We will also be piloting a Personal Adviser Service in 12 areas. The first six, run by the Employment Service, began in September. The remainder are being put out to open tender and we expect they will start operating early next year. As participation in this New Deal is voluntary, the Government do not have an estimate for the numbers of people who will be assisted through the Personal Adviser Service. However, in the pilot areas, the Personal Adviser Service will be available to nearly a quarter of a million people on incapacity benefits. There will be independent evaluation of the pilots and we expect the results to be available by the end of 1999.

CABINET OFFICE

Ministerial Staff

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many ministerial staff in Ministers' offices have been replaced through advance termination of contract since 1 May 1997. [55339]

Mr. Kilfoyle: To the best of my knowledge, there is one case and that is the one referred to in the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 29 January 1998, Official Report, columns 386–89.

Cash Limits

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proposals he has to change the 1998–99 cash limit or running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: Administration and Cabinet Office: Other Services Votes. [58090]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates:

The cash limit for Cabinet Office: administration (Class XVII, Vote 1) will be increased by £34,937,000 from £119,119,000 to £154,056,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £7,840,000 from £55,063,000 to £62,903,000.

The cash limit for Cabinet Office: other services (Class XVIII, Vote 1) will be increased by £6,825,000 from £42,531,000 to £49,356,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £5,945,000 from £42,694,000 to £48,639,000.

This is to take account of the following:

End Year Flexibility

As announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36, the Cabinet Office: administration Vote is eligible for a cash limit increase of £24,965,000 and a running costs increase of £13,909,000 in respect of end year flexibility arrangements for capital and running costs. The Cabinet Office: other services Vote is eligible for a cash limit and running costs increase of £1,232,000 under the same scheme, including and amount of £75,000 transferred from the Privy Council Office (Class XVIII, Vote 3) for the Central Drugs Co-ordination Unit.

This Supplementary gives effect to the increases. The cash limit and running costs limit of the Cabinet Office: administration Vote will be increased by £19,600,000 and £8,544,000 respectively. The cash limit and running costs limit of the Cabinet Office: other services Vote will be increased by £1,232,000. The remaining entitlement of £5,365,000 will be surrendered to the Treasury, to partly offset increased provision for the programme to modernise government.

Modernisation of Government

The Cabinet Office has received increased provision of £21,097,000 for the programme to modernise government, which was announced by the Prime Minister in a Written Statement on 28 July 1998, Official Report, columns 132–34. This includes £16,300,000 to the Cabinet Office: administration Vote for combating the millennium bug, a new Centre for Management and Policy Studies, and a relocation project; and £4,797,000 to the Cabinet Office: other services Vote for strengthening the Prime Minister's Office, work on social exclusion, strategic communications and constitutional reform, and a new Performance and Innovation Unit.

Machinery of Government and Other Changes

The Cabinet Office: other services Vote has taken over responsibility for the Central Drugs Co-ordination Unit from the Privy Council Office (Class XVIII, Vote 3) (increased provision of £553,000, offset by a transfer payment from the Privy Council Office).

Responsibility for the Freedom of Information Unit has been transferred from the Cabinet Office: administration Vote to the Home Office (Class VII, Vote 1) (a transfer payment of £439,000 to the Home Office, offset by reduced provision).

The ownership of certain buildings has been transferred from Cabinet Office: administration Vote to the Department of Health (Class XII, Vote 2) (£20,000) and DETR (Class VI, Vote 3) (£147,000).

Responsibility for the Office of the Minister Without Portfolio has been transferred from the Cabinet Office: other services Vote to the Cabinet Office: administration Vote (a transfer payment of £368,000, offset by increases and reductions to provision).

The Cabinet Office: other services Vote has received a transfer of £796,000 from the Cabinet Office: administration Vote for jointly administered common services.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve, and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

PRIME MINISTER

Animal Welfare

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answers of 2 February 1998, Official Report, column 476, and 22 June 1998, Official Report, column 351, for what reason no announcement has yet been made in respect of the co-ordination within Government of animal welfare policies; when he expects to make such an announcement; and if he will make a statement. [56358]

The Prime Minister: An announcement will be made shortly.

Government Residential Property

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the Government Ministers currently residing in publicly owned accommodation; and if he will make a statement on the precedents for the use of each property by Government Ministers, the reasons why the properties are so used and total annual cost in each case of the current and previous years of such use. [56376]

The Prime Minister: For the terms on which official Government residences are occupied, and the precedent for the use of each property, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave her on 9 March 1998, Official Report, columns 19–20. For a list of Ministers currently residing in publicly owned accommodation, I refer her to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) on 23 April 1998, Official Report, columns 674–75. The list is unchanged except that my right hon. Friend the former President of the Board of Trade now occupies the same official residence in her role as the President of the Council. For details of the costs of maintaining such properties, I refer my hon Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) on 9 February 1998, Official Report, column 17. The cost of maintaining these properties in 1998–99 is estimated to be £1.2m.

Ministerial Candidates (Security Vetting)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the value of reports from the security services on the potential security risks of candidates for ministerial positions; what opportunities are provided to persons so reported on to respond to those reports; and if he will make a statement. [57472]

The Prime Minister: It has long been the practice for the Security Service to draw to the attention of the Prime Minister when forming a Government any significant national security information in its possession which relates to members of the Government party. This arrangement has been endorsed by successive Prime Ministers and I am satisfied that it remains both necessary and proper.

The recently published annual report of the Intelligence and Security Committee, established under the Intelligence Services Act 1994 to examine the expenditure, administration and policy of the United Kingdom's Intelligence Services, did not criticise or question the probity of this process, but emphasised the heavy responsibility on the Director General of the Security Service to ensure that the information put forward is accurate and related solely to national security. In their response to the report, the Government made it clear that they were satisfied that the Director General took this responsibility seriously and that the arrangements continued to be proper and appropriate.

It is of course the case that decisions on the formation of a Government remain a matter for the Prime Minister alone.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if (a) Ministers and (b) civil servants were consulted over the decision to arrest General Pinochet. [56782]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 October 1998]: Under section 8(1)(b) of the Extradition Act 1989, the decision whether to issue a provisional warrant in response to a request from an extradition partner is one for the Bow Street Magistrate. This was a strictly judicial matter and therefore properly not a decision subject to consultation with Ministers. The only consultation which did take place was between the Metropolitan Police and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on the technical question of whether Senator Pinochet was entitled to diplomatic immunity.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister when (a) he and (b) his officials were first informed that Senator Pinochet had entered the United Kingdom on his current visit. [57432]

The Prime Minister: On 16 October.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those ministers with whom he has discussed the arrest of Senator Pinochet and the dates on which the discussions took place. [57429]

The Prime Minister: It is the normal convention under this and previous Governments that discussions which take place between the Prime Minister and Ministers are not routinely disclosed. On this occasion, however, it has been made public that I made clear to the Cabinet on 22 October that there should be no discussion at Cabinet, given that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary might in due course have to address the issue in a quasi-judicial role.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister when he was first informed that an international warrant for the arrest of Senator Pinochet had been issued; and who informed him. [57428]

The Prime Minister: As has been made clear publicly, I was first informed by my office on 16 October.

Sudan

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answers 19 October 1998, Official Report, column 915, on Sudan, if he will discuss with the American Administration provision of (a) anti-TB drugs and (b) chloroquinine and other anti-malarial drugs to the Sudan, in quantities which would have been produced by the El Shifa Factory, prior to its destruction. [57979]

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom and the United States are substantial donors of humanitarian assistance to Sudan, which includes support for health care activities targeted at the poorest and most vulnerable groups. We are not aware that the provision of essential drugs for these groups has been affected by the destruction of the El Shifa factory.

President Menem

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of President Menem's original article for The Sun newspaper submitted to 10 Downing Street for comment by the Prime Minister's Office. [57974]

The Prime Minister: No. The article by President Menem in The Sun on 23 October expressed the views and sentiments of the President of Argentina. As has been made public, the Argentine Government sought advice on the style of their presentation, as I routinely ask of other Governments when I write articles for foreign newspapers.

Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library copies of his correspondence with the United Nations High Commission for Human Rights on the subject of the proposed Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission. [57767]

The Prime Minister: The UN High Commissioner of Human Rights wrote to me on 18 June and I replied on 9 July. Copies of these letters have been placed in the Library. Officials from the Northern Ireland Office also met officials from the UN High Commission on Human Rights as part of the consultations with interested organisations on the human rights provisions of the Northern Ireland Bill.

Cash Limits

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to change the Cabinet Office: Security and Intelligence Services cash limits for 1998–99. [58084]

The Prime Minister: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary token Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVIII, Vote 2 will be decreased by £237,000 from £708,143,000 to £707,906,000 and the gross running costs limit increased by £148,000 from £375,845,000 to £375,993,000.

This change is to take on board transfers; £193,000 to the Home Office Class VII, Vote 1; £45,000 to the Foreign Office Class II, Vote 1. £148,000 proposed gross running costs increase is to correct an error in the capital charge adjustment.

There will be an increase in Appropriation in Aid of £12,249,000 resulting from changes in accounting procedures and a net increase in other current expenditure payments of £11,279,000.

The increases will be offset by transfers, and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Access to Work

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will extend the eligibility criteria for access to work to include (a) councillors and (b) other elected officials. [57635]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 29 October 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question asking him to extend the eligibility criterion for Access to Work to include Councillors and other elected officials. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Leigh Lewis as Chief Executive of the Employment Service. I am replying in Mr. Lewis' absence.

Access to Work provides help for disabled people who are in, or, who about to enter, paid employment. It is designed to encourage employers to take on or retain disabled people by meeting some or all of the extra costs resulting from disability. The aim is to help disabled people in activities from which they earn their living.

The activities of Councillors and other elected officials are not generally regarded as main paid employment. To extend Access to Work to these groups would lead to pressure for help from many other groups who are not in paid employment, but who regard their activities as being of equivalent status. The Access to Work budget is limited and extending coverage in this way would result in less help being available for people entering or in paid employment.

I hope this is helpful.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 25 September on behalf of his constituents, the governors of Brewster Avenue School. [57529]

Mr. Mudie: A letter was dispatched to the right hon. Member on 28 October.

Broomfield Primary School

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on when he expects to reach a decision on the appeal lodged by Broomfield Primary School, Broomfield, Chelmsford, concerning Essex LEA's direction on admissions to the school. [57769]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Broomfield School has referred to the Secretary of State notices issued by Essex local education authority under section 431 of the Education Act 1996 directing the school to admit five children. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made a decision on two of the five referrals. The other three referrals relate to children not due to start school until either January or April 1999. My right hon. Friend will be making a determination on those referrals when further consultation with Essex local education authority and local schools has been completed.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October. [57992]

Mr. Mudie: Shortly.

Ministerial Group on Disabled People

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many times the ministerial group on disabled people has met since May 1997. [57639]

Ms Hodge: The Ministerial Group on non-benefits issues affecting disabled people has met on three occasions. Its first meeting was in February 1998.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much funding he currently estimates will be released through the abolition of the assisted places scheme in each year for which forecasts have been made. [57662]

Ms Estelle Morris: Our latest estimate of savings against the previous Government's published expenditure plans is £22 million in the current financial year 1998–99, and £63 million in 1999–2000, with £82 million in 2000–01 and £101 million in 2001–02 assuming that the original baseline figure of £180 million for 1999–2000 is rolled forward. The estimates have been refined to take account of outturn figures for the last academic year 1997–98, and assume falling numbers of assisted place holders over the years in question while continuing the present arrangements for means-testing and fee-setting.

Working Time Regulations

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice has been issued by his Department to (a) local education authorities and (b) schools on the implications of the working time regulations for the employment of (i) teaching and (ii) non-teaching staff. [57705]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has not issued advice, but the Department of Trade and Industry issued guidance to employers generally in August, and has conducted a public awareness campaign on the implications of the regulations.

Class Sizes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made towards meeting the Government's targets on class sizes. [57509]

Ms Estelle Morris: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham), on 29 October 1998, Official Report, column 231.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will provide a breakdown of the allocation of extra money to reduce class sizes. [57511]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table details the allocations so far made to both Local Education Authorities and Grant Maintained Schools, to deliver our pledge to cut infant class sizes. The respective sums of £22 million in revenue funding and over £45 million in capital funding will provide some 1,500 additional teachers and 600 extra classrooms to enable authorities and schools to make an early start in delivering the class sizes pledge.

Cash Limits

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes he plans to announce to cash limits and running cost limits within his responsibility for 1998–99. [58113]

Mr. Mudie: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services), Vote 3 (Employment Service), and Vote 4 (Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in England), will be amended as follows:

Class	Vote	Existing cash limit	Change	New cash limit
IX	1	10,356,420,000	25,182,000	10,381,602,000
IX	3	1,739,859,000	9,999,000	1,749,858,000
IX	4	131,641,000	−13,000,000	118,641,000

The cash limit for Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) will be increased by £25,182,000 from £10,356,420,000 to £10,381,602,000. This is the net effect of virements of £3,900,000 and £695,000 from non-cash limited sections of the Vote to sections A and B, £10,000,000 additional cover for capital loans in grant-maintained schools following the ESA95 classification changes, a transfer of £13,000,000 from OFSTED (Class IX, Vote 4) in connection with the Books for Schools Initiative, and a transfer of £13,000 from the Department of Health (Class XI, Vote 2) for the early years policy; offset by transfers of £1,350,000 to the Department of Culture, Media and Sports (Class X, Vote 1) for Dance and Drama under the interim funding scheme, of £201,000 to the Welsh Office (Class XIV, Vote 2) for the University for Industry, of £250,000 to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions in respect of capital costs of Government Offices, and of £180,000 and £445,000 to the Scottish Office (Class XIII, Vote 3) in connection with educational qualifications and University for Industry respectively. We have also taken this opportunity to take up

The cash limit for Class IX, Vote 3 (Employment Service) will be increased by £9,999,000 from £1,739,859,000 to £1,749,858,000. This increase results from the take up of £10,000,000 running costs end year flexibility, offset by an increase in appropriations in aid due to New Deal recoveries. The running costs limit on Vote 3 (within of the control total) has been increased by £19,500,000 from £758,173,000 to £777,673,000 as a result of the end-year flexibility take up and a virement of £9,500,000 from capital to pay for IT services now supplied by an external provider.

The non-Voted cash limit DfEE/LACAP has also been increased by £958,000 from £43,982,000 to £44,940,000 as a result of the take up of end-year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on the 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36.

Increases will be offset by transfers and charges to the reserves and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Colombia

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to British Petroleum concerning the Company's internal investigation into arms sales and military activity in Colombia. [56259]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I met senior BP personnel earlier this week. One of the matters discussed was the situation in Colombia. I reaffirmed our view that we expect all British companies to operate ethically and transparently. I also made it clear that we expect them to take responsibility for the actions of their subcontractors.

Visa Applications

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he collects regarding the numbers of people who, having been refused visit visas to enter the United Kingdom, have subsequently been granted visas as a result of a review of the decision by an entry clearance manager. [57333]

Mr. Fatchett: Entry Clearance Issuing Posts are asked to keep a record of the number of visit applications which have been refused and subsequently granted as a result of a review by the Entry Clearance Manager. Statistics from our 100 busiest Entry Clearance Posts, which account for 97 per cent. of all applications received worldwide, show that, between January and September 1998, 477 visas were granted as a result of such a review.

EU General Affairs Council

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the outcome of the General Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 26 and 27 October. [57853]

Ms Quin: The information is as follows:

General Affairs Council, 26–27 October

The General Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 26–27 October adopted the A points listed in document 12161/1/98 and noted the resolutions, decisions and opinions adopted by the European Parliament in its session of 5 October—9 October and listed in document 11721/98. Copies of the documents listing the A points and resolutions will be placed in the House Libraries as soon as they become available.

Agenda 2000

The Council considered a Presidency progress report (document 12153/98). Ministers agreed on the importance of meeting the timetable for Agenda 2000 (agreement in March 1999). Ministers also agreed that decisions on whether pre-accession funds released by the accession of new Member States could be reallocated to the remaining applicant countries should be taken by qualified majority. The Council failed to agree the rate at which Community assistance should be given to pre-accession projects, but it approved Commission proposals for 100 per cent. funding of technical support projects, and for up to 2 per cent. of the budget being spent on preliminary Commission studies. There was general agreement on the management of the agricultural and structural pre-accession instruments, and the nature of the Commission's relationship with the EIB.

The Commission presented its Own Resources report (Document 11666/98) on Member States' contributions to the EC Budget. It proposed various solutions to the net contribution imbalance experienced by some Member States, including the option of co-financing the Common Agricultural Policy.

Enlargement

Ministers noted progress in official-level preparation of the EU's negotiating positions, ahead of substantive negotiations with the candidates at ministerial level on 10 November.

FRY/Kosovo

The Council adopted a declaration on a comprehensive approach to Kosovo. The Council condemned action by the FRY authorities against the independent media as demonstrated by the prosecution of the owner and editor of the news magazine "Evropljanin", and by the adoption of the new law on public information. The Council expressed its support for Montenegro. The EU will consider ways in which it can continue to support Montenegro's economy and its drive toward political and economic reform.

Albania

The Council stated its support for the new Albanian government. It welcomed the International Conference in Tirana on 30 October. It agreed the EU input into the Conference. It welcomed the supplement to the WEU Feasibility Study on possible options for an International Police Operation in Albania.

Middle East Peace Process

Ministers issued a declaration welcoming the Wye Agreement and congratulating Netanyahu and Arafat on their achievement. Tribute was paid to the important contributions of Clinton and Albright and to the support of King Hussein. In light of the agreement, Ministers discussed ways to integrate EU work in support of the peace process.

Burma

The Council agreed conclusions and a Decision: (a) rolling over the EU Common Position for a further six months; (b) strengthening it by including transit visas and Burmese officials involved in tourism; (c) echoing views of Burmese democratic leaders that tourism to Burma is inappropriate at present; (d) providing for a meeting of EC/ASEAN Joint Co-operation Committee with only a passive Burmese presence.

Malta

There was a brief exchange under "Other Business" concerning progress on updating the Commission's 1993 Opinion on Malta.

EU/GCC Joint Council

Ministers reviewed relations between the EU and the GCC, and agreed to increase the momentum of negotiations for an EC/GCC Free Trade Agreement. They discussed regional issues such as Iran, Iraq and the Middle East Peace Process, and human rights.

Association Council with Bulgaria

The Council considered the functioning of the Europe Agreement, and Bulgaria's preparations for EU membership.

Kosovo

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's contribution to the OSCE monitoring force in Kosovo. [55906]

Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's contribution to the OSCE monitoring force in Kosovo. [55904]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary stated in the House on 19 October 1998, Official Report, column 954, we shall provide up to 200 verifiers to the Kosovo Verification Mission run by the OSCE.

Britain is already playing a key role in establishing this Mission. Major-General Drewienkiewicz heads a group of 10 British personnel attached to or working alongside the OSCE in Vienna.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many OSCE representatives are currently stationed in Kosovo. [57964]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There are currently about 25 OSCE representatives in Kosovo. This figure does not include the members of the Kosovo Diplomatic Observer Mission (KDOM) who will be folded into the OSCE mission once it is fully up and running.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British participants there will be in the OSCE contingent in Kosovo; and when he expects them to reach the territory. [57963]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary stated in the House on 19 October 1998, Official Report, column 954, we shall provide up to 200 members of the Mission. We expect the first contingent of up to 50 verifiers, who will initially be accredited to the Kosovo Diplomatic Observer Mission (KDOM), to arrive toward the end of the week.

Britain is already playing a key role in establishing this Mission. Major-General Drewienkiewicz heads a group of 10 British personnel attached to or working alongside the OSCE in Vienna. Major-General Drewienkiewicz took part in the OSCE's advance party which visited Kosovo and Belgrade between 18 and 21 October.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British participants in the OSCE contingent are currently stationed in Kosovo. [57965]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: At present there is one British secondee to the OSCE Kosovo Verification Mission stationed in Kosovo. We expect this to increase to 6 on the ground in 3 November. This is in addition to 3 British monitors in the European Community Monitor Mission/Kosovo Diplomatic Observer Mission. There is currently a joint FCO/MOD reconnaissance team in Kosovo looking at the practical issues of deploying a further 50 British verifiers by the end of this week.

Brunei

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what human rights issues were raised with the Sultanate of Brunei during his recent visit. [57521]

Mr. Fatchett: During the recent State visit to Brunei, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the Bruneian Foreign Minister and raised the issue of progress on modernising the Bruneian Constitution.

Congo

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo concerning human rights and democratic Government. [57519]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I made clear our wish to work with the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) to improve the human rights situation and promote democratisation when I led a European Union Troika mission to Kinshasa in June. We continue to raise our concerns about the human rights situation at every suitable opportunity, bilaterally, with our EU partners and in international fora. In particular, our Ambassador in Kinshasa has raised the targeting of Tutsis and possibly civilians of other ethnic groups. He has also made clear our readiness to help with the rebuilding of the country, including support for the electoral process, and that in doing so we are looking for progress towards respect for human rights, democracy, economic reform and the rule of law.

Kurdish Political Parties

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has held with representatives of the Kurdish political parties in Turkey, Iran and Iraq concerning a negotiated peace; and if he will make a statement. [57518]

Mr. Fatchett: We have held meetings at Ministerial and official level in October with the leaders of the Kurdish Democratic Party and the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, to discuss the agreement they signed in Washington on 17 September. We remain strongly committed to supporting Kurdish reconciliation in northern Iraq, and will continue our contacts with these and other Iraqi-Kurdish parties. In Turkey our Embassy maintains regular contact with representatives of the People's Democracy Party (HADEP), as it does with all the major political parties.

Bahrain

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions about human rights and democratic Government took place with the Government of Bahrain during the recent ministerial visit. [57520]

Mr. Fatchett: During my visit to Bahrain in September I had a long meeting with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Shaikh Mohammed bin Mubarak Al-Khalifa. Our discussions covered a broad range of subjects, including human rights issues on which I set out the Government's concerns. I welcome Bahrain's efforts to improve its human rights record by signing the Convention Against Torture and allowing the International Committee of the Red Cross to monitor prison conditions. I urged Bahrain to communicate more with human rights NGOs and journalists.

Gibraltar

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make available to the Governor of Gibraltar the necessary resources to protect the integrity of British territorial waters around Gibraltar against the incursions of Spanish fishing boats and armed militia. [57640]

Ms Quin: We have assured the Governor that HMG will provide whatever support is necessary to protect the integrity of British territorial waters around Gibraltar.

Common Foreign and Security Policy

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals for reform of the European Union's Common Foreign and Security Policy and the future of the Western European Union. [57962]

Ms Quin: At the Pörtscharch informal European Summit, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear his wish for the European Union's Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP) to be made more effective. He also argued to greater European responsibility for defence, but made it clear that he is open-minded on institutional issues.

Cash Limits

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes to make in his Department's cash limits and running costs limits for 1998–99. [58098]

Mr. Fatchett: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates the following changes will be made.

The cash limit for Class II, Vote 2 (Other External Relations) will be increased by £23,592,000 from £212,068,000 to £235,660,000. The increase is required to cover UK contributions to certain OSCE, United Nations, and WEU Missions of £23,085,000 and also for transfer of £507,000 from the Department for International Development towards the Know How Fund for assistance to Central and Eastern Europe.

The increase will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve, and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October. [57996]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Shortly.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the meetings during the last two years of the Executive Council of St. Helena where the elected members of the Legislative Council were not in a majority. [57544]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Out of the fifty-six meetings of the Executive Council of St. Helena held during the two years up to 30 October 1998, only that held on 16 June 1998 met when there was not a majority of Elected Members present. There was, however, a quorum on that occasion.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing), on 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 81, relating to departmental properties, for what reason the annual running costs for each property in each country are not readily available. [57536]

Mr. Fatchett: Details of the annual running costs for each property in the overseas estate are not held centrally. Following the 1996 Fundamental Expenditure Review, geographical FCO Commands and overseas Posts were given the delegated financial authority (except in a few areas) to manage and maintain their portion of the estate. Annual running costs for the overseas estate in 1996–97 totalled £108.7 million of which more than half was for rents and rates. Costings for each property could only be compiled by approaching Posts individually. The UK has 221 Diplomatic Posts world-wide. The overseas estate consists of about 3,900 properties. To provide costs for each individual property would involve disproportionate expenditure of public funds.

Former Soviet Union (Chemical Weapons)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the Government have to enable the international community to purchase from countries of the former Soviet Union their stocks of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons so that they can be destroyed. [56473]

Mr. George Robertson: I have been asked to reply.

Purchasing nuclear chemical and biological weapons would be prohibited under the Nuclear Non Proliferation Treaty and the Chemical and Biological Weapons Conventions. We do, however, keep under review possibilities for assisting Russia and the other countries of the former Soviet Union in destroying their stocks of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and ensuring safe and secure management of associated materials. Assistance provided to date includes contributing to funding the International Science and Technology Centre, to provide employment for scientists previously employed on weapons of mass destruction programmes. We are currently considering whether we could provide effective national assistance to Russia for destruction of chemical weapons, in addition to the 10–15m ecu allocated under the European Union's Technical Assistance to the Commonwealth of Independent States (TACIS) programme. We are also studying possible opportunities for collaboration within the G8 framework to dispose of plutonium surplus to defence needs in Russia.

HEALTH

Autistic Children

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue guidance on services for autistic children. [57057]

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to issue specific guidance on services for autistic children; and if he will make a statement. [57051]

Mr. Hutton: We have no plans at present to issue specific guidance on services for autistic children. Guidance on services for children with disabilities, including those with autism, is contained in "The Children Act 1989 Guidance and Regulations Volume 6 Children with Disabilities" published by HMSO in 1991. Local authority social services departments have a general duty, under the Children Act 1989, to safeguard and promote the welfare of all children in their care who are "in need". To reinforce the provision in the Children Act on children in need, the Education Act 1996 puts a statutory duty upon health authorities and local authorities to help education authorities in the assessment and support of children with special needs. We will keep the need for specific guidance on autism under review.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to collect information centrally on autistic children; and if he will make a statement. [57047]

Mr. Hutton: We have no plans to collect information centrally about the number of children below the age of five years diagnosed as being autistic. It is for the local statutory authorities to determine the needs of children with autism in their area and work together effectively to ensure that these needs are met.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that every health authority has sufficient funds to develop new services for autistic children; and if he will make a statement. [57049]

Mr. Hutton: Health authorities are given allocations for hospital and community health services to commission health care for their resident population. It is for individual health authorities to decide the level and type of services commissioned, in partnership with local general practitioners and through consultation with other agencies and local people, taking account of local circumstances and national policies and priorities.

Mid Essex Hospitals Trust

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 22 October 1998, Official Report, column 1180, what is the nature of the work being done with the North Thames Task Force and the National Patients Access Team to reduce waiting lists in the Mid Essex Hospitals Trust area; and what is the agreed target for reducing waiting lists by March 1999 in the Mid Essex Hospitals Trust area. [57217]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The North Thames Waiting List Task Force and the National Patients' Access Team have been working with clinicians and managers at the trust to achieve a shared understanding of the particular causes of pressure on the trust's waiting lists and are assisting the trust in implementing good practice from elsewhere to help reduce waiting lists.

The agreed waiting list target reduction for the Mid Essex Hospitals National Health Service Trust is to a list size of 9,738 at the end of March 1999.

Midwives

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwives have (a) joined and (b) left the National Health Service during each of the last two years. [57596]

Mr. Milburn: Figures on vacancies for nurses and midwives are collected by the Office of Manpower and Economics and published in the annual reports of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine, copies of which are available in the Library.

St. Mary's Hospital, Newport

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to make an announcement on the remedial works needed at St. Mary's Hospital, Newport, Isle of Wight. [57908]

Mr. Milburn: We expect to make an announcement shortly.

Social Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment the Social Services Inspectorate has made of the use and effectiveness of IT within social services departments in order to monitor the targets set in the Joint Guidance on Priorities for the NHS and Social Services. [57628]

Mr. Hutton: The targets in the National Priorities Guidance "Modernising Health and Social Services" comprise of some which rely on National Health Service data, some of which rely on social services data and others relating to process which do not require the collection of quantitative data. The quantified targets relating to social services are all supported by existing Departmental statistical collections or by currently proposed collections for the year 1999–2000.

In 1997, the Social Services Inspectorate published a national overview report of social services department's information strategies. In addition the Department has recently completed a special study of the information which social services departments have at their disposal to inform their commissioning of services for older people. It is anticipated that a report will be published shortly.

Neuroleptics

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will require pharmacy advisers to monitor the use of neuroleptics in nursing and residential homes. [57631]

Mr. Milburn: We have no plans to require prescribing or pharmaceutical advisers to monitor the use of neuroleptics in nursing and residential homes. The responsibility for prescribing, including repeat prescribing and the prescribing of neuroleptics in nursing and residential homes, rests with the doctor who has clinical responsibility for that particular aspect of a patient's care. An extra safeguard is the responsibility nurses who administer the medication in nursing homes have in assessing for side effects and reporting on the effects to the prescriber.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing homes have been operational in each health authority in each of the last three years. [57632]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of independent nursing homes registered with each health authority as at 31 March for the years 1995, 1996 and 1997 is provided in the table. Information as at March 1998 is not yet available centrally.

Community Pharmacists

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to put in place a system of remuneration to support the conduct of prescription reviews by community pharmacists in accordance with the proposals made by the Royal Pharmaceutical Society. [57630]

Mr. Milburn: Our proposals for the future role of community pharmacy within the National Health Service will be published in a strategy document which is being developed. We are looking at a number of ideas including services by pharmacists, which might include reviewing patients' prescription medicines.

Pharmacy Advisers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pharmacy advisers have been employed by each health authority in each of the last three years. [57633]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested cannot be reliably identified from central data.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the trend in the number of requests for treatment at East Kent hospitals for sexually transmitted diseases arising from the increase in the number of asylum seekers resident in the area. [57547]

Mr. Milburn: Most sexually transmitted diseases are treated in genito-urinary medicine clinics which offer open access and confidential services; consequently information on users of these services is limited. The number of sexually transmitted diseases reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service for East Kent is small and trends are therefore difficult to interpret. Data from 1995 onwards for East Kent do not indicate any clear difference from national trends.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by health authority, the targets for bringing down waiting list numbers. [57739]

Mr. Milburn: March 1999 health authority waiting list targets, by National Health Service Region, are listed in the table.

Nurses

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by (a) health authority and (b) region, the numbers of current vacancies for nurses. [57738]

Mr. Milburn: This information is not collected centrally. Figures on vacancies for nurses and midwives are collected by the Office of Manpower and Economics and published in the annual reports of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine, copies of which are in the Library.

Cash Limits

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes will be made to the cash limits of his Department in 1998–99. [58086]

Mr. Dobson: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XI, Vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) will be reduced by £166,621,000 (from £31,392,213,000 to £31,225,592,000). This allows for a transfer of £220,000,000 following a re-appraisal of drugs budget requirements and transfers of £5,000,000 to Class XI Vote 2 (Department of Health administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) for children's services; £30,000 to Class XI, Vote 2 for the United Kingdom Coordinating Committee for Cancer Research and £20,000 to Class XIII, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland) for general practice fundholders' cross border flows. The overall reduction is partially offset by an increase of £56,000,000 in respect of the take up of end year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36 and a transfer of £2,429,000 from Class XI Vote 2 for the Medical Devices Evaluation Service.

The cash limit for Class XI, Vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) will be increased by £55,873,000 (from £1,096,377,000 to £1,152,250,000). This increase allows for a claim on the Reserve of £53,900,000 to support the persons from abroad children's grant; transfers totalling £5,030,000 from Class XI, Vote 1 as mentioned above; a transfer of £20,000 (running costs) from Class XVII, Vote 1 (Cabinet Office: Office of Public Service) for accommodation costs; a transfer of £11,000 (running costs) from Class XIV, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health services and other health services (part), Wales) for the National Screening Committee. The overall increase is partially offset by transfers totalling £3,075,000 for the Medical Device Evaluation Service made up of transfers to Class XI, Vote 1 as mentioned above (£2,429,000), Class XIII, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland) (£369,000), Class XIV, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health services and other health services (part), Wales) (£185,000) and to the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland (£92,000) and a transfer of £13,000 to Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) for their responsibility for childcare and early education.

The non-voted cash limit for supplementary credit approvals for personal social services (DoH/LACAP) in England is to be increased by £602,000 from £14,700,000 to £15,302,000 in respect of the take up of the end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36.

The Department's gross running cost limit will be increased by £31,000 from £262,915,000 to £262,946,000 as detailed above.

All increases will either be offset by savings, increased receipts or transfers to or from other Votes or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon tabled on 7 October. [57993]

Ms Jowell: Shortly.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 17 September on behalf of his constituent Mr. Bishop. [57526]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State replied to the right hon. Member on 29 October 1998.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to reply to the letter of 13 October from Anthony C. Walkey, 11 Castle Street, Totnes, Devon about the death of his son at the North Middlesex Hospital on 2 February; and if he will make a statement as to the steps he is proposing to take to ensure that lessons are learnt from the case. [55874]

Mr. Dobson: I will reply shortly to Mr. Walkey's letter of 12 September.

Policy Proposals (Quality of Life)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what methods of measurements and from what base lines his Department employs in assessing the quality of life implications of policy proposals; and how these were selected. [55770]

Mr. Milburn: The Department uses a range of methods to assess the implications of policy proposals, consistent with relevant guidance such as the Department of Health guide "Policy Appraisal and Health", copies of which are available in the Library and other guidance from other Government departments.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many community hospitals there are in Great Britain; and how many are under review; [57497]

(2) how many community hospitals there were in Great Britain on 1 May 1997. [57498]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested for England is not collected centrally.

Questions regarding Scotland and Wales are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of States for Scotland and for Wales.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many community hospitals will close by 1 January 2000; [57494]

(2) how many community hospitals he estimates there will be in Great Britain on 1 January 2000. [57496]

Mr. Milburn: We are committed to modernising the National Health Service and community hospitals can have an important role in this NHS.

It is not possible to predict what future requirements for community hospitals will be. These will be considered on a case by case basis.

Questions regarding Scotland and Wales are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average bed occupancy in community hospitals in (a) England and (b) Oxfordshire in the last 18 months. [57495]

Mr. Milburn: Information about bed occupancy is available only by trust or type of trust, not by hospital or type of hospital.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress his Department has made in ensuring that British beef is bought for British armed forces. [55748]

Mr. Rooker: Government Departments are generally required to look for best value for money in their procurement decisions and it would contravene the Treaty of Rome to operate a "Buy British" Policy.

Nevertheless, following a request from the UK, last summer a regulation was agreed in Brussels, authorising the sale of 1,200 tonnes of UK intervention beef to UK armed forces and associated personnel. The MOD's suppliers began taking over this beef in September and, apart from those forces stationed overseas, all new supplies of beef to the armed forces will be wholly British.

Green Pound Compensation Scheme

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the signatory countries for the green pound compensation scheme; when he plans to implement the scheme; and from what source he proposes to fund the scheme. [55875]

Mr. Rooker: The agrimonetary system forms part of the European Union Common Agricultural Policy. It is used to convert CAP payments set in Ecu into national currencies. Compensation is available for green rate revaluations in certain circumstances, 50% of which can be reclaimed from the EU budget. The Government announced in December 1997 that they would pay a package of aid worth £85m to beef and sheep producers, in respect of green pound revaluations that occurred in 1997. All of this £85m package could be reclaimed from the EU budget.

Over-30-months Scheme

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will lift the over-thirty-months scheme weight limit for beef cattle imposed in August 1997. [55922]

Mr. Rooker: We currently have no plans to remove the weight limit on payments under the Over-Thirty-Months Scheme. The scheme rules and rates of payment are in any case set not by the Government but by the European Commission.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with farmers about the difficulties in fattening calves sufficiently by the age of 30 months; if he will allow calves of up to 36 months to enter the food chain; on what scientific evidence the age limit was set at 30 months; and if he will make a statement. [56557]

Mr. Rooker: In most circumstances, beef production systems can be adapted quite easily to enable producers to finish cattle at under thirty months of age and farmers' leaders have not suggested to us that there is any real problem in doing so. However, the Beef Assurance Scheme, which was introduced in September 1996 in response to representations from specialist breeders, enables Scheme animals to be slaughtered for human consumption up to 42 months of age, subject to very strict conditions.

The controls were introduced after the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) recommended, on 20 March 1996, that the carcases from cattle over 30 months should also be deboned and the trimmings classified as Specified Bovine Offals (SBOs). The basis for the 30 months age point was that it was half the way through the average incubation period of the disease. Evidence at the time from scrapie experiments in animal models indicated that it was after this point that infectivity was expected to enter the central nervous system (CNS) where the infectivity would rise to much higher levels than in other infected tissues. Consequently, cattle over the age of thirty months were considered to represent a much higher risk to consumers than younger animals. Very few animals below this age showed signs of clinical disease. The then Government went further than the advice to debone and, with the subsequent exception of Beef Assurance Scheme animals, all cattle over 30 months were prevented from entering the food chain. To date, no further scientific information has been available which has caused SEAC to change its advice.

The Government have at present no plans to modify the rule but, as with all BSE control measures, it is being kept under review. Any decision to change the 30 months age limit will be taken in the light of progress with the eradication of BSE and of further advice from SEAC. The effective operation of the rule is a condition of the Florence Agreement on the lifting of the beef export ban. Any change would therefore require the agreement of the European Commission and other Member States.

Calf Processing Aid Scheme

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which EU countries will continue the calf processing assistance scheme after the EU directive expires; and what plans he has to continue assistance for calf processing after 30 November. [55876]

Mr. Rooker: We understand that France and Ireland will continue to operate the Calf Processing Aid Scheme after the obligation to do so lapses on 30 November; Portugal may also do so. As I made clear to the House on 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 89, the Government's current intention is that the Scheme will cease to operate in the United Kingdom as soon as the obligation lapses.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement listing the steps necessary to reintroduce the calf processing aid scheme after it ends in November. [56094]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 October 1998]: The Government would first need to be persuaded that the continued slaughter of calves at taxpayers' expense would be in the best long-term interests of UK agriculture. Second, having no current financial provision for the continuation of the scheme, they would need to agree with the Treasury that funds could be made available. Finally, it would need to inform the Commission of its intention to reintroduce the scheme.

Farm Subsidies

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what funding his Department made available for agri-environmental schemes in each of the last three years; and what amounts he expects to be available over the next three years. [56516]

Mr. Morley: Details of expenditure on each of the agri-environment schemes in England are contained in the Departmental Reports for 1996 (CM 3204), 1997 (CM 3604) and 1998 (CM 3904), available from the Library of the House.

The implications of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review for expenditure on the agri-environment schemes over the next three years were explained in the written statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 27 October 1998, Official Report, columns 156–58.

Ms Keeble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if farmers will be able to have their CAP subsidy paid in euros. [56709]

Mr. Morley: The Commission's proposals for the reform of the agrimonetary regime, to take account of the introduction of the Euro, allow for the possibility of operators in Member States not participating in the first wave to receive CAP payments in Euro. In response to UK pressure, the Commission have amended their original text to make the option of Euro payments in non-participating countries a more attractive and workable one.

We recognise that some farmers and traders in the UK are interested in the option of receiving CAP payments in Euro. At present, we are actively examining the very considerable practical and resource implications of such a move, whilst continuing detailed discussions on possible arrangements with the Commission.

In considering the option of Euro payments, we want to be sure that offering it would not jeopardise the standards of service we currently aim to provide, or increase the risk of disallowance on any part of CAP expenditure administered in the UK.

Discussions on the agrimonetary regulations are still continuing in the Council.

Fisheries

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedure he will follow to achieve the United Kingdom's priorities of (a) retaining relative stability and (b) the maintenance of six and 12 mile fisheries limits. [56633]

Mr. Morley: The United Kingdom will continue to work closely with the European Commission and other Member States.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has made to fishermen's federations' proposals for coastal or zonal state management. [56634]

Mr. Morley: I have warmly welcomed the joint strategy of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations and Scottish Fishermen's Federation on the future of the Common Fisheries Policy as a good basis for discussion.

Fur Farming

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will bring forward new measures to regulate fur farming; and if he will make a statement. [56499]

Mr. Morley: The Government's firm intention is to ban fur farming as soon as practicable. However, primary legislation will be required, and any prohibition on fur farming must be implemented in accordance with national and international law if it is to achieve its objective. We are considering how best to achieve that objective. Any Government proposals for legislation to ban fur farming would be subject to public consultation. All current mink farm licensees have been given notice of our intention to prohibit fur farming.

Horses

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the size of the current black market in veterinary medicines for horses in the United Kingdom; and what assessment he had made of the impact of European Council Directive 81/851/EEC after 1 January 2000. [55805]

Mr. Rooker: We do not hold information on a 'black market' in veterinary medicines for horses. Any evidence of medicines being sold or supplied illegally should be sent to the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, who will pursue instances vigorously.

Council Regulation EC 2377/90 requires maximum residue limits (MRLs) to be set for all veterinary medicines used for food producing animals by 31 December 1999. It is a matter for the companies concerned to provide the data to support an application for an MRL. A number of applications for assessment have been received but there are some active ingredients for which the necessary data to support an application for an MRL have not been provided within the deadline laid down by the Council Regulation.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the use, in horses, of sedatives prior to general anaesthesia in preventing perioperative death. [56755]

Mr. Rooker: All applications for marketing authorisations for veterinary medicinal products are assessed against statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. As part of this process, the applicant company is required to submit data to the Veterinary Medicines Directorate where they are carefully assessed by qualified specialists. Where appropriate, advice is also sought from the independent scientific Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) which advises Agriculture and Health Ministers on veterinary medicines. No product is approved unless it satisfies the criterion for efficacy.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which pre-operative sedatives used in the UK for horses do not currently have a submitted maximum residual level; how many he expects to have a MRL by 1 January 1999; and how many presently have a submitted MRL. [56752]

Mr. Rooker: There are six active ingredients in veterinary medicinal products used as pre-operative sedatives for horses in the UK. Four of these have been included in Annex II (substances not subject to maximum residue limits) of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 2377/90 as amended. The two remaining active ingredients, acepromazine and xylazine, are currently being assessed.

Pigs

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current size of the national pig herd; what estimate he has made of the likely size of the pig herd over the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [56925]

Mr. Rooker: The provisional results of the June 1998 census records a total of 8.1 million pigs in the UK. Although no estimates are made beyond the immediate future, it is reasonable to assume that the number of pigs will fluctuate over the next five years in line with the pig cycle.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates his Department has made of the average level of farm incomes on pig farms over the next six months; and if he will make a statement. [56924]

Mr. Rooker: None; indications are that, given the present level of production and market prices, incomes will remain depressed.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the names of those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 May 1997, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and whether they receive remuneration. [56797]

Mr. Morley: Details of appointments made in 1997 were published in the 1998 Departmental Annual Report, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Similar information for appointments made in 1998 will be included in the 1999 Report. I will write to my hon. Friend with a copy of this information in advance of publication.

BSE (Additional Funding)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much additional funding he intends to provide to (a) Gloucestershire County Council and (b) nationally to Trading Standards Services in order to carry out work in connection with BSE. [56783]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 29 October 1998]: I have no plans to provide any additional funding to Gloucestershire County Council or nationally to Trading Standards Services to carry out their enforcement responsibilities in respect of BSE legislation. Through the BSE Regulatory Forum, however, my officials will continue to work with representatives of local authorities on ways in which improved guidance and co-ordination of enforcement activity can be achieved to ensure the most cost effective use of available resources.

Animal Feed

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action has been taken by his Department to implement the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee's recommendation that there should be a prohibition on the use of mammalian meat and bonemeal in feed for all farm animals. [57003]

Mr. Rooker: The Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (Amendment) Order 1996 (SI 1996 No. 962), which came into force on 29 March 1996, implemented the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee's advice of 20 March 1996 by introducing a prohibition on the feeding of mammalian meat and bone meal to all farmed livestock.

Farmers (Average Age)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the average age is of British farmers; and how this has changed over the last thirty years. [57300]

Mr. Rooker: The earliest year for which figures are available is 1975. The age distribution of UK farmers in 1975 and 1995 are given in the table. The estimated average age has increased from 53 years in 1975 to 55 years in 1995.

Milk Marque

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if Milk Marque is covered by the same rules as other dairy consortia when negotiating prices for its product. [57302]

Mr. Rooker: The whole of the market for raw milk is subject to competition law in the same way as other sectors. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission is currently investigating the market for raw milk in Great Britain and is due to report in January 1999.

Pre-slaughter Tranquillisers

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks are in place to establish that meat containing pre-slaughter tranquillisers is not being imported into Britain. [57298]

Mr. Rooker: Member States are required to test meat for a wide range of veterinary medicines, including tranquillisers, and are responsible for implementing and policing the relevant Directives in respect of their own national production.

Any third country wishing to export fresh meat to the European Union must submit residue testing plans to the Commission that provide guarantees which are at least equivalent to the requirements of the Community on EC producers.

Port Health Authorities in the UK (or local authorities in their absence) are responsible under Directive 90/675/EEC for checking 1% of all imported meat and meat products for residues of veterinary medicines.

Imported Meat

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of imported animal carcases is tested for the presence of hormones. [57299]

Mr. Rooker: All EU Member States are required to have national monitoring plans to detect residues and substances in animal tissues and products, including meat, and to report the results of their monitoring to the European Commission each year. These monitoring plans apply to the production process and, as such, provide the necessary guarantees in respect of products in free circulation in the Single Market as a whole, not just in the Member State concerned. Because of these Single Market rules, checks for the presence of residues in carcases originating in other Member States are not routinely carried out in the UK.

All meat imported into the EU must originate from approved third countries. Responsibility for approving third countries rests with the European Commission, who must take account of information on matters which include legislation on the use, authorisation, distribution and marketing of substances which might be administered to livestock. Inclusion or retention on the list of approved countries is subject to the submission of acceptable monitoring plans which provide guarantees at least equivalent to those provided by EU Member States.

In addition, the European Commission's guidance on the testing of meat imported from third countries states that at least 1 per cent. of consignments which are subject to physical checks at Border Inspection Posts should be randomly sampled for residues, contaminants and bacteria such as salmonella and coliforms. For red meat, 1 per cent. of consignments subject to physical checks equates to 0.2 per cent. (i.e. 1 in 500) of all consignments. In the year to 31 August 1998, 3.7 per cent. of consignments of all products of animal origin imported into Great Britain from third countries were sampled by the local authorities responsible for Border Inspection Posts. The figures do not separately identify the numbers of checks on carcases or the number of residue checks carried out.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that standards of inspection of imported meat are as high as those at British abattoirs. [57305]

Mr. Rooker: All consignments of fresh meat imported into the UK, whether from other EU Member States or third countries, must have been produced in accordance with the harmonised Community rules laid down in Council Directive 64/433/EEC. Among other things, this Directive sets out the licensing, structural and veterinary supervision requirements to be applied in abattoirs, cutting plants and cold stores. Slaughterhouses in third countries have to comply with standards at least equivalent to those laid down in the Directive before they can export to the EU.

Ensuring that all Member States comply with their Community obligations in properly implementing and applying the Directive is the responsibility of the European Commission, whose Food and Veterinary Office carries out regular programmes of inspection visits to all Member States. The Food and Veterinary Office are also responsible for carrying out inspections in the third countries from which fresh meat is imported into the Community.

All consignments of fresh meat imported from third countries are subject to veterinary inspection on entering the EU to ensure that conditions of import have been complied with and to ensure that they have remained in a satisfactory condition during transport. In line with Community rules, random spot checks at destination may be carried out on consignments of fresh meat imported into the UK from other EU Member States.

Abattoirs

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safety assessment his Department has conducted on the spreading of condensate from abattoirs on to agricultural land. [57102]

Mr. Rooker: Condensate is produced from the steam driven off during the rendering of carcases or offal. Most renderers dispose of their condensate to sewers but a small number spread theirs on agricultural land. The spreading of waste on agricultural land is subject to control by the Environment Agency under the waste management provisions of Part II of the Environment Protection Act 1990.

In response to concerns about the practice, the Environment Agency commissioned a risk assessment report by independent technical consultants about the safety of condensate spread from a plant. The independent Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee are reviewing the practice, based on the results of the risk assessment and associated work, and we await their advice.

Badgers

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate he has made of the proportion of cubs born which would be saved as the result of the imposition of a six-month closed season for the culling of badgers; [57549]

(2) what estimate he has made of the proportion of cubs born which will be preserved by the introduction of a three-month closed season for the culling of badgers; [57554]

(3) what assessment his Department has made of information relating to the effects upon welfare of the imposition of a six-month closed season for the culling of badgers; and if he will list the sources of such data; [57550]

(4) what factors underlay his statement that a three-month closed season for culling badgers would meet the major welfare concerns about dependent cubs; [57552]

(5) if he will list the experts he has consulted prior to determining the proposed closed season for badger culling. [57551]

Mr. Rooker: The Krebs report recommended that lactating female badgers should be culled throughout the year. Ministers asked Professor Bourne's group to re-examine this recommendation, taking account of comments received on the Krebs report, many of which expressed concern, and views expressed during meetings with a variety of individuals and organisations. The group concluded that badger welfare would be enhanced by a closed season, but that culling would not be a practicable policy option if that season lasted longer than three months. The three months from February to April were selected because, over a period of years, they would offer protection to a greater proportion of dependent cubs than any other three month period, but no estimate has been or can be made of the numbers affected.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department's nature conservation advisers observe a closed season of seven months on the issuing of licences to disturb or exclude badgers from their setts. [57553]

Mr. Rooker: Although there is no provision for a closed season under the Protection of Badgers Act 1992, the Ministry takes the badger breeding season into account when determining licence applications.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the value, in current prices, of the United Kingdom's net imports or exports of (a) beef and veal, (b) lamb and mutton, (c) pork and other pigmeats, (d) cereals and other crops, (e) horticultural products and (f) non-meat livestock products for each year since 1975. [57505]

Mr. Rooker: The tables show the value at current prices (prices at the time of trade), as recorded by the Overseas Trade Statistics, for imports, exports and net trade for each year from 1975 to 1997 for the following:

(a) beef and veal;

Intervention Board

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed to the Intervention Board Executive Agency's cash limit for 1998–99. [58156]

Mr. Nick Brown: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for the Intervention Board Executive Board Executive Agency (Class IV Vote I Administration) will be increased by £12,310,000 from £60,194,000 to £72,504,000. This vote is eligible for a running cost increase of £761,000 in respect of the end year flexibility arrangements, as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36.

The increase is to cover running costs associated with the Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (BSE) schemes operated by IB and its agents in the United Kingdom; and capital expenditure on IT systems enhancement and development. The running costs limit for the Intervention Board Executive Agency will be increased by £11,448,000 from £57,590,000 to £69,038,000.

The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Stolen Property

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what estimates he has made of the total value of church furniture, ornaments and other items that have been stolen from churches open to the public in the past 12 months. [57069]

Mr. Stuart Bell: This is not a matter for the Church Commissioners. I understand that there is no central register kept of thefts from Church buildings in England. However, figures from the Ecclesiastical Insurance Group, which insures most Anglican Churches in England, show that, in 1997, 1,974 cases of theft were reported from Anglican Churches insured by the EIG in England and Scotland. The items stolen were insured for some £1.5m. These records do not show whether the church was open to the public at the time of the theft.

Millennium Arts Festival

Mr. Rowe: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what steps the Commissioners are taking to encourage the Church of England to support local schools participating in the JC2000 Millennium Arts Festival for Schools. [57476]

Mr. Stuart Bell: Although not a matter for the Commissioners, I understand from the Church of England Board of Education that a quarter of the Schools in England, many of them Church schools, have already indicated an interest in the JC2000 Millennium Arts Festival for Schools. The Church of England is actively involved, through its network of Diocesan Directors of Education, in the support of 5,000 Church of England schools in England, and many other schools have connections with their parish Church. The Board of Education expresses its support for this exciting and imaginative millennium project.

DEFENCE

Defence Estates Organisation

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Defence Estates Organisation for 1998–99. [58406]

Mr. Spellar: The following key performance targets have been set for the Defence Estates Organisation for 1998–99:

Key Target 1:

Establish cost of disposals (including internal costs and consultancy fees, but not works in aid) as a percentage of disposal receipts and set targets for improvement.

Key Target 2:

Achieve gross disposal receipts of £150 million.

Key Target 3:

Complete transfer of title to new owner of 90 per cent. of disposals within three years of property being passed to DEO for disposal.

Key Target 4:

Complete initial assessment against Business Excellence Model.

Key Target 5:

Complete internal IIP and external customer survey and submit reports to the Owners Advisory Board, together with proposed targets for improvement.

Key Target 6:

Appointment of external project managers for capital works projects:

a: 99 per cent. achievement within one month for appointments made through Term Commissions or Partnering arrangements.

b: 90 per cent. achievement within 5 months for all appointments.

Mr. Raymond Bristow

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the medical tests conducted on Gulf War Veteran Warrant Officer Ray Bristow of the 32 field hospital in the Royal Army Medical Corps in respect of suspected health damage arising from exposure to depleted uranium dust during the Gulf War. [57090]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence is aware that Dr. Asaf Durakovic, a US physician, is reported as having carried out tests for the presence of depleted uranium (DU) on some UK Gulf veterans, including Mr. Raymond Bristow. However, we have not yet seen details of either the tests which have been performed or the results obtained. Accordingly, the MOD cannot comment on Dr. Durakovic's reported findings.

The MOD is well aware that a link has been suggested between possible exposure to DU and the illnesses being experienced by some Gulf veterans. However, this is only one of a number of factors which have been suggested as causes of Gulf veterans' illnesses and, pending further medical and scientific evidence, my Department is keeping an open mind on this issue.

Any Gulf veteran who is concerned that his or her health has been adversely affected by Service during the Gulf conflict, including possible exposure to DU, is urged to seek a referral to the MOD's Medical Assessment Programme.

Royal Irish Regiment

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons in the regular battalions of the Royal Irish Regiment were born in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) the remainder of the United Kingdom, (c) the Republic of Ireland and (d) elsewhere. [57581]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Members of the Royal Irish Regiment (General Service), whose place of birth is recorded as being in the four areas specified, are detailed in the table.

Place of birth	Number
Northern Ireland	348
Remainder of the United Kingdom	249
Republic of Ireland	33
Elsewhere	5
Total	635

West Indies Guard Ship

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to alter the rules for engagement for the West Indies Guard Ship; and if he will make a statement. [57748]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are no plans to do so at present. Nonetheless, Rules of Engagement, including those for the West Indies Guard Ship, are reviewed on a regular basis in the light of changing operational circumstances.

Chile

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings he or his ministers or officials had arranged, prior to 17 October, with representatives of the Chilean Navy; when such meetings were due to have taken place and where; and if the possible purchase by the Chilean Navy of British destroyers or frigates was to be discussed. [57523]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 2 November 1998]: Before 17 October, many regular and routine meetings took place between UK and Chilean officials on a range of defence matters both in the UK and Chile.

Representatives of the Chilean Navy were scheduled to meet my officials for exploratory discussions relating to their frigate replacement programme during a planned visit to the UK at the beginning of November. This will now not take place as originally planned.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings he or his ministers or officials have had with representatives of the Government of Chile since 1 May 1997; what was discussed at each such meeting; who was present; and what agreements were reached. [57524]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 2 November 1998]: I, my Ministerial colleagues, the Chiefs of Staff and my senior officials have met Chilean Defence Ministers and Commanders in Chief on 21 occasions in the UK, Chile and elsewhere since 1 May 1997.

Discussions covered a wide range of matters of mutual defence interest, including defence exports. No formal agreements were concluded, although the two sets of annual defence cooperation talks established proposals for military assistance and defence cooperation over the forthcoming year. In addition, regular routine meetings have taken place between UK and Chilean officials on a range of defence matters.

Helicopters (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums have been paid to farmers in Northern Ireland as compensation for livestock damaged by low-flying helicopters in each of the last 10 years; and what guidance is issued to helicopter pilots to minimise such damage. [56294]

Mr. Spellar: Prior to March 1994 the records relating to compensation paid out for damage to livestock by low-flying helicopters were maintained manually and to retrieve the information requested would, even if possible, involve disproportionate cost. However, figures for the total amount of compensation paid to claimants in Northern Ireland due to helicopter activity from April 1989 to March 1994 are set out.

1 April 1989–31 March 1990	594,899
1 April 1990–31 March 1991	1,240,680
1 April 1991–31 March 1992	2,796,735
1 April 1992–31 March 1993	4,170,361
1 April 1993–31 March 1994	6,456,702

For the remainder of the 10-year period computer records show compensation paid out to claimants for damage to livestock as follows:

1 April 1994–31 March 1995	5,743,922
1 April 1995–31 March 1996	1,426,424
1 April 1996–31 March 1997	442,040
1 April 1997–31 March 1998	460,021
1 April 1998–30 September 1999	184,953

The form in which the information is compiled does not indicate whether the claimants who received compensation payments were farmers. The figures also include elements of loss/damage to fencing, silage, land etc. To produce a breakdown of the individual amounts paid in each case to reflect the amount of compensation paid for animals only would again involve disproportionate cost.

The guidance issued to helicopter pilots with regard to minimising damage applies to all pilots, regardless of where they are serving, and is highlighted at an early stage of their training. Damage to crops and livestock can be caused only by low-flying. Pilots are reminded that, when such activity is necessary, whether due to prevailing operational commitment or weather constraints, appropriate action should be taken, in particular where there is a known or perceived sensitive area—for example, hospitals, stables etc.—to minimise the impact of their actions on the local community.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many helicopters are presently in use in Northern Ireland; and how many (a) flights took place, (b) flying hours were recorded and (c) complaints were received in each of the last three years. [56379]

Mr. George Robertson: There are currently 40 helicopters operated by the Royal Air Force, Army Air Corps and Royal Navy which have an operational tasking in Northern Ireland. Records of individual flights in the Province over the last three years are not maintained; however, 81,174 flying hours were recorded in the period concerned. These are as follows:

Dates	Flying hours
1 January 1996–31 December 1996	28,911
1 January 1997–31 December 1997	30,083
1 January 1998–30 September 1998	22,180

Formal records on complaints about military helicopters were not kept until the beginning of 1997. In that year 749 complaints were recorded, and at the end of August in the current year, 475 complaints had been recorded.

Surveillance Towers (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of British Army surveillance towers in Northern Ireland in (i) September 1994 and (ii) October 1998; and what plans he has to remove further towers from use in the next six months. [56394]

Mr. George Robertson: In September 1994 there were surveillance towers at 10 hilltop sites in the South Armagh area, 2 towers in Londonderry and 3 surveillance posts mounted on blocks of flats within Belfast. in October 1998 there were the same number of sites in South Armagh and Belfast, but only one in Londonderry, the other having been closed in 1995. In addition to surveillance towers, the security forces maintain a number of other structures which are used for a variety of observation purposes.

The security situation is kept under constant review and the configuration of the military infrastructure adjusted accordingly. However, there are no plans to withdraw any of the towers from use over the next 6 months.

British Forces (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the British Army regiments currently deployed in Northern Ireland, indicating the number attached to each and the estimated duration of their tour of duty; and if he will make a statement on planned deployment during the next 12 months providing there is no unforeseen change in the security context. [56397]

Mr. George Robertson: The British Army Infantry Battalions—and one Royal Marine Commando—currently committed to Northern Ireland are listed in the table, along with their strength and planned tour length:

Unit	Strength	Length of tour
The 1st Battalion The Scots Guards	569	2 years—until March 2000
The 1st Battalion The Royal Welch Fusiliers	566	2 years—until August 2000
The 2nd Battalion The Light Infantry	623	2 years—until March 1999
The 1st Battalion The Royal Regiment of Fusiliers	605	2 years—until May 1999
The 1st Battalion The Queen's Lancashire Regiment	606	2 years—until December 1999
The 1st Battalion The Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (Princess Louise's)[1]	609	2 years—until March 1999
42 Commando Royal Marines	577	6 months—until March 1999

[1] The 1st Battalion The Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and the 39th Regiment Royal Artillery, respectively the Province Reserve Battalion and the Urban Reinforcement Battalion, are fully committed to Northern Ireland, although only one company of each was deployed in the Province at 30 September 1998. The 1st Battalion The Royal Regiment of Wales, the Rural Reinforcement Battalion, is also fully committed to Northern Ireland but was not deployed in the Province at that time.

Note:

Figures as at 30 September 1998

In addition, there are 6 Home Service battalions of the Royal Irish Regiment, totalling 4,431 soldiers, comprising both full-time and part-time members, which are wholly committed to service in Northern Ireland.The security situation is kept under constant review and the level of Army support to the Royal Ulster Constabulary adjusted accordingly in line with their requirements. However, it is the Department's policy not to disclose details of future deployments to the Province.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the overall strength in September 1998 of British military forces in Northern Ireland broken down into numbers attached to the (i) Army, (ii) RAF, (iii) Royal Navy, (iv) RIR Home Service full-time and (v) RIR Home Service part-time. [56396]

Mr. George Robertson: The information requested is set out in the table:

	Strength
Army (General Service)	[1]10,873
Royal Air Force	1,152
Royal Navy	321
The Royal Irish Regiment (Home Service Full Time)	2,627
The Royal Irish Regiment (Home Service Part Time)	1,961
Total	16,934

[1] Includes the Province Reserve Battalion and the Urban Reinforcement Battalion which are fully committed to Northern Ireland although only one company of each was deployed to the Province as at 30 September 1998. Also includes the Rural Reinforcement Battalion which was committed but not deployed at that time

Note:

Figures as at 30 September 1998

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British Army and RIR barracks are maintained in Northern Ireland; if he will cost and itemise major works projects (a) completed over the last 12 months and (b) already under way, initiated or committed in the next 12 months. [56398]

Mr. George Robertson: There are currently 44 bases used by the British Army including the Royal Irish Regiment, in Northern Ireland which are occupied by a platoon or more of troops. These include bases which are exclusively military or which are shared with the RUC. It does not include RUC stations which have a token military presence, surveillance towers, observation posts, Permanent Vehicle Check Points (PVCPs), or patrol bases which were previously PVCPs.

A continual programme of maintenance and development exists to keep the Army estate in good operational order. Within the last 12 months 7 major works projects costing £300,000 or more have been completed at a total value of £21.415m. These projects were at the following locations:

£ million

Location	Cost
Thiepval Barracks	2.612
Massereene Barracks (3 projects)	13.821
Hollywood	2.253
Ballykinler	1.184
New Barnsley	2.545

There are currently 29 major works projects costing £300,000 or more, with a total value of £54.696m, under way, initiated or committed in the next 12 months. These projects are at the following locations:

£ million

Location	Cost
Ballykinler (4 projects)	4.067
Drumadd	0.960
Omagh (3 projects)	8.500
Ballykelly (3 projects)	3.570
Aldergrove (4 projects)	13.000
Hollywood (3 projects)	3.595
Kinnegar	2.500
Thiepval Barracks (7 projects)	14.080
Magilligan	3.174

Guardsmen Fisher and Wright

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date, and at what level, the decision was taken to permit administrative facilities at (a) Wellington Barracks, (b) Catterick Barracks and (c) other premises within his responsibility to be used for (i) answering phone calls, (ii) replying to mail and (iii) other activities associated with the campaign for the release of guardsmen Fisher and Wright; and what was the cost to public funds. [56297]

Mr. George Robertson: The Fisher and Wright Release Group is an independent organisation which is run by former members of the Scots Guards and is not supported from public funds. The Group was not permitted the use of Army administration facilities in connection with its campaign, nor was assistance provided from any Army establishment.

The Group consists of former members of the Regiment who are entitled to enter the Scots Guards Regimental Headquarters. They thus held their initial meetings at Wellington Barracks in 1997. The Regimental Colonel subsequently directed that these meetings should cease to take place within the Headquarters. The Group has used a P.O. Box number as a point of contact since 10 July 1997 and has not held any further meetings at the Regimental Headquarters.

As the two Guardsmen are still members of the Scots Guards, its Regimental Headquarters has inevitably been a natural focal point for ex-Servicemen who wish to express their support for the Release Group's activities. Any telephone calls or letters that have been received for this purpose have, however, been immediately redirected to the Release Group.

My Department has also received a number of representations both in support of and against the Guardsmen.

Defence Intelligence and Security Centre, Chicksands

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of the refurbishment of the Priory at the Defence Intelligence and Security Centre at Chicksands; and if his Department has borne this cost. [57314]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Defence Intelligence and Security Centre (DISC) is based at Chicksands. The cost of refurbishing the Priory Officers' Mess at DISC is currently forecast at £4.731 million, and is being met by my Department.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many American visiting forces are based at the Defence Intelligence and Security Centre at Chicksands; and for what purpose. [57315]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are 10 US personnel attached to the Defence Intelligence and Security Centre at Chicksands to support training and exercises, particularly where there is a mutual US/UK interest. Some may deploy on operations where there is a combined national interest, subject to approval from the respective governments.

Force Research Unit (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the application of exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in respect of Questions concerning expenditure and staffing levels of the Force Research Unit in Northern Ireland. [56400]

Mr. George Robertson: I have reviewed the application of the exemption in this case and I am satisfied that this information should continue to be withheld under the terms of the Code of Practice.

TREASURY

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy retrospectively to increase the rate of capital gains tax for funded unapproved retirement schemes from 23 per cent. to 34 per cent. [58255]

Dawn Primarolo: This capital gains tax change is not retrospective. It is normal practice for capital gains tax reforms to apply to gains realised after the date of announcement of the changes.

Tobacco

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total revenue receipts by month so far this year from excise duties on tobacco; and what is his forecast for total receipts for 1988–99. [58208]

Dawn Primarolo: The amounts of revenue receipts by month this year are as follows:

Excise duty

January	33
February	42
March	105
April	1,635
May	18
June	49
July	101
August	269
September	469
Total	2,721

The total tobacco revenue forecast for 1998–99, published in the March 1998 Financial Statement and Budget Report, is £8.9 billion.

Duty-Free Sales

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rules will apply for sales on ferries of goods bought at port of loading following the abolition of duty free sales inside the European Union. [58209]

Dawn Primarolo: The arrangements which will apply for sales of goods on board ferries, for passengers to take away, following the abolition of intra-EU duty free sales are still being considered. The Commission recently set out, in a press release, their thinking on how the successor regime will work and the Government are giving very careful consideration to this. It is based on the existing provisions of Council Directive 92/12/EEC. At the EU Excise Committee meeting on 1 October the UK reserved its position to allow time for a full appraisal of the Commission's position.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with European partners about the tax regime which will apply after the abolition of duty free sales inside the European Union. [58210]

Dawn Primarolo: The last time that the abolition of intra-EU duty free sales was discussed at a political level with EU partners was at the ECOFIN Council meeting on 19 May 1998 where a number of Finance Ministers made it clear that they opposed any re-opening of the decision to abolish. Subsequent discussions, on the operation of the successor regime, have been at official level in the Commission chaired EU Excise Committee. Customs and Excise are also entering into a bi-lateral and multi-lateral discussions with a number of other member states to work through the detail of how a successor regime might work in practice.

Working Groups

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the reports of the Treasury-sponsored working groups on (a) the financing of high technology companies and (b) smaller quoted companies. [58338]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: These two working groups have now reported to me and I have today placed copies of their reports in the Libraries of both Houses, and they are available on request from the Treasury's Inquiry Unit.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to veto all EU proposals regarding the harmonisation of corporation tax rates. [58204]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 November 1998]: Direct tax is primarily a matter for Member States at national level. Decisions on European tax issues are subject to unanimity. The Government will have no hesitation in using the veto when it is in the UK interests to do so.

Age Concern (VAT)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 43, if he will permit Age Concern, Essex to defer implementing value added tax on its home support service pending the review by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise of such levies. [58089]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs are now consulting interested parties to agree the circumstances in which home support services will be exempt from VAT as charity welfare services. Charities including Age Concern, Essex should not anticipate the outcome of the consultation, but where they have paid VAT on services which are subsequently determined to be exempt, they may reclaim the overpaid tax from Customs subject to the normal rules.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Albania

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance has been provided to Albania in the past five years; and what assessment she has made of its impact. [56918]

Clare Short: UK Government assistance to Albania began in 1993 and has focused on the regulation of capital markets, rural development, health reform, good government and the development of civil society. We have also provided assistance to Albania through contributions to multilateral organisations such as the EU, and during last year's disturbances we provided significant emergency assistance.

Early in 1997 there was a hiatus in bilateral assistance to Albania due to civil disturbances. Since then the programme has been restarted and it is focusing on strengthening governance and civil society, rural development and health reform.

Figures for UK bilateral and multilateral assistance are as follows:

Bilateral:

1998–99	[1]800,000
1997–98	749,104
1996–97	1,038,000

Cash Limits

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what changes will be made to the cash and running costs limits for her Department in 1998–99. [58027]

Clare Short: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class III, Vote 1 will be increased by £12,607,000 from £1,620,700,000 to £1,633,307,000 and the running cost limit will be increased by £3,893,000 from £62,135,000 to £66,028,000.

Rollover of underspend on 1997–98 cash limit	11,221,000
Partial take up of running costs end of year flexibility carryforward	1,893,000
Outward PES transfer to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Class II, Vote 2)	507,000
Increase in Vote Cash limit	12,607,000

The increase on the running cost limit is in respect of the take up of end of year flexibility carryforward as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36, and a transfer of resources of £2,000,000 from the Unallocated subhead.

The increases will be offset by transfers and a claim on the Reserve and therefore will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she has to change the 1998–99 External Finance Limit for the Commonwealth Development Corporation. [58407]

Clare Short: The External Finance Limit for CDC for 1998/99 will be increased by £15,000,000 from minus £15,000,000 to zero. Advances to CDC in the current financial year will total £35,919,000 equal to loan repayments by CDC, achieving net zero financing in 1998/99. The increase will be offset within DFID's existing provision and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Renewable Energy Projects

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the funding allocated for renewable energy projects for each of the last five years by country. [56928]

Clare Short: Developing renewable energy was part of the former ODA's energy strategy. Renewable energy then featured in the Development White Paper, as it has a clear contribution to make to our sustainable livelihoods and environmental protection objectives.

A table listing the funding allocation for renewable energy projects over the last five years follows. This includes projects funded by Aid and Trade Provision and Joint Funding Scheme. Large scale hydro power (above 1MW) projects are not included in the table, however, as they are not covered by the accepted definition of renewable energy.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what methods the Environment Agency record facilities which use genetically modified organisms in industrial processes and which may release these organisms in waste streams; what is the location of the facilities; and what genetically modified substances are produced. [56332]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 26 October 1998]: The Environment Agency is required by section 64 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to maintain a register of waste management licences which it has issued for the recovery or disposal of waste. The register is open for inspection by members of the public free of charge. The information which must be included on the register is set out in regulation 10 of the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994. It is not possible separately to identify from the register those facilities which dispose of waste derived from GMOs as opposed to other types of waste.

Under separate legislation, the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992 (as amended in 1996 and 1998), all premises which undertake activities with GMOs in containment are notified to the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). The Contained Use Regulations also require that all GMOs which have a potential to cause harm to humans or the environment are inactivated before they are disposed of. There is no explicit requirement to inactivate those GMOs which would not cause harm and which would have limited survival in the environment. However, there is a requirement that physical barriers are in place. It is HSE's experience that users of large scale facilities routinely inactivate all GMOs prior to disposal.

There are 34 large scale facilities notified to HSE, although not all of these are necessarily undertaking large scale work at this time. A list of these will be placed in the Library of the House. Not all of these large scale facilities are for industrial production. Some undertake only research. HSE does not hold the data requested on all large scale activities undertaken. The data that are held are not in an easily retrievable form and where the substance produced is not a live GMO this falls outside of the scope of the Contained Use Regulations. Therefore, I regret that I cannot give a list of the genetically modified substances produced.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what acreage of land used as trial sites for GM crops is currently under cultivation. [57225]

Mr. Meale: There are approximately 717 acres of land currently under cultivation with trials of GM crops in the UK.

Bypasses

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement in his policy regarding the need for bypasses of villages and small market towns. [56727]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our policies for management and investment in the trunk road network are set out in A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England. Traffic calming schemes can bring environmental benefits to local communities by reducing speeds and improving safety. But in some cases the volume of traffic passing through a town or village may be such that the only way of improving the environment significantly is to remove traffic by building a bypass.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals his Department has to ensure a more efficient processing of PFI projects. [56931]

Mr. Meale: My Department is working with the Treasury Taskforce in implementing the recommendations of the Bates Review for streamlining the Private Finance Initiative.

Regulations have been amended to help facilitate local government PFI schemes and an explanatory note on PFI and Public/Private Partnerships in local government was issued in September. The Department has strengthened its private finance unit, which plays a central co-ordinating and advisory role. We shall continue to liaise with local government representatives and the Public Private Partnerships Programme about procedures for handling applications for revenue support.

Sprinklers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the building regulations to require the installation of sprinklers as a fire precaution in (a) residential accommodation, (b) schools and other education buildings, (c) offices and (d) hospitals. [57184]

Mr. Raynsford: The guidance given in the Approved Document to Part B on how to comply with the Requirements of Part B of the Building Regulations, which deals with fire safety, is currently under review. However, there are no plans to amend the fire safety requirements in Part B of the Building Regulations for the installation of sprinklers on buildings of this type.

Designated Beaches

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the criteria that have to be met before a local authority can apply for a beach to be designated under the European Bathing Directive. [57072]

Mr. Meale: The Bathing Water Directive defines 'bathing water' as running or still fresh water and sea water in which bathing is not prohibited and is traditionally practised by a large number of bathers. The Government also takes into consideration, as evidence that the waters are well used by bathers, the existence of facilities associated with popular bathing areas.

Water Meters

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the privatised water companies currently providing water meters free of charge to customers who wish to transfer to a metered tariff. [57071]

Mr. Meale: According to the Director General of Water Services' "1998–99 report on tariff structure and charges" (a copy of which is in the Library) the following water undertakers in England and Wales provide meters free of charge to their domestic customers where they are [illegible] in the company's preferred location: Anglian Water, Bournemouth and West Hants Water, Bristol Water, Dee Valley Water, Essex and Suffolk Water, Folkestone and Dover Water, Hartlepool Water, Mid-Southern Water, Severn Trent Water, South East Water, Sutton and East Surrey Water, Thames Water and Wessex Water.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he, other Ministers or officials of his Department have had with his Italian counterparts concerning the availability of storage capacity in Italy for reprocessing radioactive wastes to be returned from the United Kingdom. [57093]

Mr. Meale: My Department has no record of any such discussions. I refer my hon. Friend to the Parliamentary Answers given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Industry on 10 June 1997, Official Report, column 415, and 5 February 1998, Official Report, column 787.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what communications his Department has with the relevant authorities in the countries from which the United Kingdom has imported spent fuel for reprocessing at (a) Sellafield and (b) Dounreay, in respect of (i) the provisions to return reprocessing wastes and (ii) the capacity in each country to store returned radioactive waste. [57092]

Mr. Meale: My Department has no specific communications on these issues, with the relevant authorities in the countries concerned.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to respond to the advice on the scope and contents of the core scientific research programme on intermediate level radioactive waste published by the Government's Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee in October. [57100]

Mr. Meale: Government policy on intermediate level radioactive waste, including the nature of the associated scientific research programme, will be considered when informed by the conclusions of the House of Lord's Select Committee on Science and Technology's inquiry into nuclear waste management. The advice of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee will be taken into account at that time.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is his Department's planned timetable for the assessment of the Environment Agency decisions on the proposed variations to BNFL's authorisations to discharge liquid and gaseous radioactive waste from Sellafield; [57103]

(2) if he will publish the unredacted version of the PA Consulting report on the business case for the Sellafield mox nuclear fuels plant submitted to the Government by the Environment Agency. [57104]

Mr. Meacher: The Agency's draft determination was received today on 2 November. Requests have been received for the Secretary of State to call in the application for his own determination. These requests are under careful consideration and the Secretary of State will reach a decision as soon as he is able to do so. One of the issues raised in the call in requests, which the Secretary of State will consider, is whether sufficient information has been released into the public domain to allow consultees to comment on the application.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what consideration he will give to the health, environmental and proliferation implications of further moves towards the full operation of the British Nuclear Fuels Mixed Oxide Fuel Plant at Sellafield in his assessment of the Environment Agency's proposed decision on the plant; [57221]

(2) if he will make a statement on the proposed decision by the Environment Agency to allow the British Nuclear Fuels Mixed Oxide Fuel Plant at Sellafield to proceed to the next stage of commissioning. [57222]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The Agency's draft determination was received on Monday 2 November. Requests have been received for the Secretary of State to call in the application for his own determination. These requests are under careful consideration. In deciding whether to exercise the statutory powers of call in all relevant factors will be taken into account. The Secretary of State will reach a decision as soon as he is able to do so.

Teesside Development Corporation

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how (a) computers and (b) CD-Roms were disposed of after the demise of Teesside Development Corporation in April. [57613]

Mr. Meale: Although the Teesside Development Corporation ceased its operational activities at the end of March, it continued in existence until the end of June in order to produce its final report and accounts and wind up its affairs. I understand that the Corporation disposed of its computer equipment during that final three-month period, after inviting competitive bids and having wiped clean the disks, as part of a packaged disposal of its office furniture and equipment.

Land Use Database

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals the Government have to provide resources to councils to enable the setting up of the National Land Use Database proposed in the White Paper, Planning for the Communities of the Future; and if he will make a statement. [57416]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government are committed to raising the proportion of new homes expected to be built on previously developed land to 60 per cent. over the next ten years. The National Land Use Database (NLUD) is important to the achievement of that objective.

Comprehensive information about the amount of land devoted to different uses is not currently collected in any nationally consistent way. This new database, which my Department is developing in partnership with the Local Government Management Board, Ordnance Survey, English Partnerships and local authorities, will eventually comprise a definitive database of land use in England, in a form that can readily be kept up to date.

For the first phase, results for which will be available in April, local authorities have been asked to provide information on previously developed sites in their area that may be available for redevelopment for new housing or other uses. This information will assist in the setting of regional targets for the re-use of previously developed land for housing, as announced in the policy document "Planning for the Communities of the Future".

With our partners in NLUD, we have taken a number of steps to assist local authorities in providing the information. These include:

workshops—6 workshops have been arranged across the country to discuss with local authorities practical issues about the compilation of the database; database—each local authority will be given a copy of a customised database, to help them in capturing the information;

surveyors—English Partnerships will be contracting surveyors to visit each local authority to assist them in drawing up their lists of sites;

Geographic Information System (GIS) tools—suppliers of GAS software to local authorities are being encouraged to develop tools to assist local authority staff to capture site boundaries in computer form; helpline—there is a dedicated helpline for local authorities to call if they have queries.

In addition, we recognise the tight timetable for supply of the data and have extended the deadline to early February 1999.

This initiative has the full support of the Local Government Association and will be an invaluable resource to local authorities in the future.

Packaging (Recovery)

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many prosecutions of eligible companies failing to register under the terms of the packaging recovery note provisions have taken place since the scheme was introduced; [57602]

(2) how many companies have registered under the terms of the packaging recovery note provisions in each of the years of its operation. [57601]

Mr. Meale: Under the provisions of the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997 eligible businesses have obligations to:

to register with the relevant Environment Agency (Environment Agency or Scottish Environment Protection Agency) or join a registered compliance scheme, provide packaging data, and pay a fee by a specified date (1 April); to recover and recycle specified tonnages of packaging waste and to certify to the relevant Agency that the recovery and recycling obligations have been complied with. The obligation to recover and recycle packaging waste took effect from 1 January 1998 and evidence of compliance with the 1998 targets must be submitted by 31 January 1999.

Obligated businesses are able to demonstrate compliance with the Regulations by obtaining a Packaging Waste Recovery Note (PRN) from an accredited reprocessor or by following the alternative approach to compliance set out in the Agencies' guidance. So far the Environment Agency has approved 191 companies as accredited reprocessors.

The Environment Agencies have a duty to monitor compliance with the Regulations. Businesses that fail to comply with the Regulations may be subject to prosecution by the Agencies. The Environment Agency views particularly seriously the non-registration of obligated businesses. The Environment Agency is carrying out a programme of visits and follow-up inquiries to companies which it believes may need to be registered. Where this has been established, the business has registered.

However, the Agency's announcement of 23 October, copies of which are being placed in the Library, clearly warns businesses that prosecutions will now follow after a 7 November deadline for 1998 registrations.

In 1997 there were 3,839 businesses registered under the terms of the Regulations. In 1998 there are 3,813 registrations to date. When account is taken of the subsidiary businesses covered by the registration of a group of companies, the number of businesses covered by registration is 8,832 businesses.

Local Government White Paper

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to allow local democratically elected authorities to agree alternative structures for political leadership other than those proposed in the Government's local government White Paper. [57683]

Mr. Raynsford: Within the 3 models proposed in the White Paper—directly elected mayor with cabinet, cabinet with a leader, and directly elected mayor and council manager—the scope for local diversity is great. If practice subsequently points up the possibility of other further valuable models for separating out the executive from the scrutiny role, the Government intend to provide for them to be available to local authorities.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend the additional powers and freedoms proposed for the beacon councils to all democratically elected councils in England and Wales. [57676]

Ms Armstrong: Beacon councils will be a key driver in modernising local government, setting the pace of change, and acting as a test bed for new freedoms and flexibilities. The transfer of freedoms and flexibilities to other councils will be considered in the light of experience by beacons. We will consult widely before establishing the scheme for beacon councils.

English Nature

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to ensure that no conflict of interest arises as a result of the Chairman of English Nature being also a non-executive director of a water company; and if he will make a statement. [57898]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 2 November 1998]: Baroness Young was required to seek consent from the Minister to join the Board of Anglican Water. The Minister gave his consent noting that Baroness Young's predecessor combined both posts without difficulty, and there are adequate provisions for dealing with conflicts of interest in English Nature's Council's Code of Practice.

National Air Traffic Services Ltd.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those organisations with which he has had discussions during the consultation on his paper, a Public Private Partnership for National Air Traffic Services Ltd.; and when he expects to reach his conclusions. [57915]

Dr. Reid: The Government published a consultation paper on their preferred option for National Air Traffic Services Ltd. on 20 October 1998 and responses to the paper have been requested by 31 January 1999. We will take account of the views expressed when reaching final decisions on the proposal early next year.

Since the consultation paper was published there have been no discussions with interested parties on the issues raised in the paper. I have, however, given evidence to the Transport Sub Committee and propose to have a meeting shortly with representatives of the CAA and NATS Trade Unions.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the statutory bodies and agencies which receive Government funding to promote energy efficiency and (b) the level of funding each received in the last year for which figures are available. [57907]

Mr. Meale: In 1997–98, the Government provided funding to 6 organisations to carry out programmes promoting energy efficiency. None is a statutory body or agency. Details of the funding they received are as follows:

Organisation	£ million
BRECSU (Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme)	7.9
ETSU (Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme)	7.8
EAGA Ltd. (Home Energy Efficiency Scheme)	74.3
Energy Action (Scotland)	0.1
NEA	0.7
Energy Saving Trust	19.7

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much his Department spent on the promotion of energy efficiency in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years. [57906]

Mr. Meale: The funding made available by my Department on programmes to promote energy efficiency across all sectors in the United Kingdom in the years 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 is set out as follows:

1995–96: £128.5 million

1997–98: £110.5 million.

Under the government's Comprehensive Spending Review, my Department's spending on programmes to promote energy efficiency is planned to rise to a total of £222.6 million in 2001–02.

Road Traffic Reduction

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy to secure a reduction in road traffic levels over the next three years. [57710]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government made clear in the recent White Paper "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone" that, in order to tackle the congestion and pollution that is caused by road traffic, we need to reduce the rate of road traffic growth. We also said that we want to see an absolute reduction in traffic in those places and streets where the greatest environmental damage is done. The White Paper set out how we plan to achieve these objectives through integrated transport policies acting at the national and local level.

The first reports contained assessments of how, and over what time scale, our policies are expected to impact on road traffic will be produced during 1999. The Road Traffic Reduction Act 1997 obliges each local traffic authority to produce a report assessing existing and forecast levels of traffic on those roads for which it is the highway authority, and the results of its consideration of whether or not to set targets for road traffic reduction on local roads in its area. We expect local authorities to submit the first, non-statutory interim, reports in July 1999 as part of their provisional local transport plans. In the light of these interim reports and plans, analysis of the impact of other measures we are proposing on road traffic, and advice from the independent Commission for Integrated Transport which we will be setting up, we will produce our first report under the Road Traffic Reduction (National Targets) Act 1998 on the question of national targets for road traffic reduction by the end of 1999.

Catalytic Converters

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of catalytic converters on the levels of plutonium in the air; what recent studies have been carried out to establish those levels; and if he will make a statement. [57226]

Mr. Meale: Catalytic converters are not expected to have any effect on the levels of plutonium in air. However, they do contain platinum group metals. My Department commissioned a report from the Imperial College of Science, Technology and Medicine in 1994 on the levels of these metals in the UK environment. The report concluded that there is no evidence of risks to human health from the use of platinum group metals in vehicle catalytic converters.

Local Authorities (Guidance)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to issue guidance to local authorities to assist them in reviewing their decision-making structures in advance of legislation to give effect to his White Paper proposals. [57781]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government welcomed the publication on 21 September by the Local Government Association of such a document entitled "Modernising Political Management Arrangements—Options within the Existing Legislative Framework".

Revenue Support Grant

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out for each year from 1992–93 to 1998–99 the (a) amount of RSG, (b) real value of RSG in April 1998 prices, (c) proportion of the RSG that reflects demographic and other volume changes and (d) proportion of RSG that accounts for new responsibilities. [57783]

Ms Armstrong: The following table sets out total Revenue Support Grant (RSG) paid to English local authorities between 1992–93 and 1998–99 in cash, and in real terms at 1998–99 values using the GDP deflator.

Revenue Support Grant (RSG)

£ million

Year	RSG Cash	RSG Real terms
1992–93	16,679	19,450
1993–94	17,052	19,371
1994–95	18,497	20,715
1995–96	18,314	19,931
1996–97	18,024	19,030
1997–98	18,675	19,217
1998–99	19,500	19,500

The total of all local authorities' Standard Spending Assessments (so-called "net Total Standard Spending", or "net TSS") is that portion of local authority expenditure which the Government wish to support through general grants such as Revenue Support Grant. In deciding net TSS, we take into account relevant demographic and other volume changes affecting local authority services, as well as new local authority responsibilities, the scope for efficiencies, and the amount the country as a whole can afford. Because the settlement represents our assessment of local government spending needs in the round, it is not possible to say how much has been included either for particular, or in total for, new responsibilities and other pressures.

Area Committees

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to allow local authorities which choose to establish area or neighbourhood committees to delegate decision-making on matters concerning their locality. [57782]

Mr. Raynsford: Bringing councils closer to the people and empowering local communities is at the heart of our policies. We believe the new political management structures proposed in our White Paper—"Modern Local Government—In touch with the people" (Cm 4014)—will ensure councils are best able to take decision which are open, accountable, and meet the needs of all their local neighbourhoods and communities.

Low-energy Lightbulbs

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to encourage the use of low-energy lightbulbs. [57669]

Mr. Meale: The energy efficiency of lighting is a significant environmental issue, given that lighting accounts for about a fifth of the electricity consumed in the UK. Research carried out for my Department suggests that there is economic and technical potential to save 32 per cent. of that energy. The Government already support a wide-ranging programme of measures, at national and European level, to encourage energy efficient lighting; and consultation is under way about further ways of delivering the potential savings.

At a national level, our Energy Efficiency Best Practice Programme provides valuable guidance to building professionals on cost-effective, energy efficient lighting measures. In addition, we are currently reviewing provisions in the Building Regulations to see, amongst other things, how standards of lamp efficacy, lighting system control and encouragement of better use of daylight might be improved, for both new buildings and existing ones. Promotion of energy efficient lighting is carried out by the Energy Saving Trust, both through its overall "Energy Efficiency" campaign and through a new project, "Lightswitch", aimed at the non-domestic sector.

At EU level we continue to support common and co-ordinated policy measures to provide product information, raise product standards and facilitate the procurement of energy efficient lighting products. This activity is closely informed by the Market Transformation Programme, which we run in the UK to research the trends in the market and to consult with a full range of stakeholder groups about possible measures for hastening improvements in performance. An important next phase of the action coordinated at EU level will be the introduction of mandatory energy labels for light bulbs, on which we plan to have UK Regulations in place next June.

While continuing work of this kind to promote the uptake of more efficient lighting equipment, we shall also continue to promote general messages about using lights more efficiently, through my Department's "Are You Doing Your Bit?" campaign.

Windfarm (Lambrigg)

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will call in the planning permission granted by South Lakeland District Council for a windfarm at Lambrigg, Cumbria. [57865]

Mr. Raynsford: I am currently considering whether the planning application should be called in. I will ensure that the hon. Member is notified of the decision as soon as possible.

Rural Action

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has received options from the Rural Action National Steering Group on the future funding of Rural Action. [58267]

Mr. Meale: No, but we understand that the contractor for the Rural Action National Steering Group has prepared a draft Business Plan setting out a strategy for the future of Rural Action and proposals for its funding. The draft is under consideration by The National Steering Group.

Road Noise

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies into the potential for reducing noise from roads in residential areas he undertook during the preparation of the roads White Paper. [58245]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England confirmed that we will continue to develop noise reducing surfaces. Account was taken of recent developments in road surfacing technology but no new studies were undertaken.

Rating Review (West Dorset)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the effects on business in West Dorset of a rating review for non-domestic rates, conducted in 2000, but based on rental values of April 1998; and if he will make a statement. [58243]

Mr. Raynsford: The next non-domestic rating revaluation in England will come into force on 1 April 2000 and will be based on rental values at 1 April 1998. The revaluation will not be completed until late 1999, and therefore, it is too early to predict its effects on business in West Dorset.

Parish Trustees

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy to encourage trustees under any circumstances to act under the Local Government Act 1972, section 13(3) and section 13(4) in the absence of a direction being given by the relevant parish meeting. [58222]

Mr. Raynsford: The appointment of Parish trustees, who are simply the depository of the title to parish property, is a matter for the parish meeting. A judgment of the Court of Appeal has indicated that they may take steps appropriate for the protection of parish property provided that those steps are not in conflict with any direction given by the parish meeting.

Motor Vehicles (Imports)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to allow an increase in the number of personal imports of motor vehicles from outwith the EU. [57938]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A public consultation began on 14 October about proposals to alter the existing arrangements for importing cars and light goods vehicles that have not been type-approved in the EU. We propose to tighten the personal import rules, so that only individuals who have lived abroad for at least 12 months, and have used the vehicle there for at least six months, will be able to use the current Single Vehicle Approval (SVA) inspection. For other non type-approved imports, we propose an end to the fixed limits on the number of vehicles of any one model that may enter service, coupled with an enhanced SVA inspection of the key safety, security and environmental standards that have to be met before the vehicle can be licensed and registered. These enhanced standards are broadly equivalent to EU type-approval but can still be applied at reasonable cost. The proposed measures are designed to improve the choice of vehicles available to consumers, whilst maintaining the safety and environmental standards appropriate for use in Britain.

Wild Boar (West Dorset)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to eliminate feral populations of wild boar in West Dorset. [58247]

Mr. Meale: Whilst we are keeping the situation under review, the small numbers of animals estimated at present to be in Dorset are not believed to pose any immediate threat to health, safety or native biodiversity. Therefore, there are no plans to eradicate the animals.

Cash Limits

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits and running cost limits for 1998–99. [58337]

Mr. Prescott: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, my Department's cash limits will change as follows. All references to the take-up of end year flexibility refer to the Chief Secretary to the Treasury's announcement of 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36.

(i) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 1—Housing, construction, regeneration, countryside and wildlife, England—will be reduced by £9,200,000 from £1,801,539,000 to £1,792,339,000. This decrease is the result of reducing spending on private sector renewal on Section P. It will allow an increase in provision by £9,200,000 on the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 13—Ordnance Survey.

Paragraph 5 of the introduction to the 1998–99 Main Estimate for Class VI, Vote 1 says that the Urban Regeneration Agency will surrender to the Consolidated Fund any receipts in excess of £11.6 million. The figure should have read £116 million.

(ii) the DETR/LACAP(E) (Local Authority Capital—Environment) non voted cash limit will be increased by £3,234,000 from £924,998,000 to £928,232,000 to allow further Supplementary Credit Approvals to be issued to local authorities to enable funding of additional Cash Incentive Scheme grants. The increase results from the take-up of end year flexibility.

(iii) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 2—Planning, roads, local transport and vehicle safety—will be reduced by £3,425,000 from £364,579,000 to £361,154,000. The reduction arises from the take-up of £172,000 capital end year flexibility and an increase of £36,403,000 to provide for the write-off of debt owed by the Humber Bridge Board to the Public Works Loan Board, less an inter vote transfer from this vote to Class VI, Vote 6, of £40,000,000 reflecting London Transport's responsibility for the Croydon Tramlink project.

(iv) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 3—Environmental protection and water—will be increased by £537,000 from £334,237,000 to £334,774,000. The increase results from the take up of the £582,000 capital end year flexibility to increase grant in aid to the British Waterways Board; and an inter vote transfer of £147,000 from Class XVII, Vote 1 (Property Advisers to the Civil Estate) to increase grant in aid to the Environment Agency to pay for additional accommodation costs; offset by inter vote transfers from this vote to Class XIII, Vote 3 and Class XIV, Vote 2 for the Scottish and Welsh regional energy efficiency offices (£40,000 and £44,000); to Class XIII, Vote 3 for grant to Energy Action Scotland (£24,000); and to Class VI, Vote 5 to allow for increased Departmental running costs following the winding up of the UK Ecolabelling Board (£84,000).

As a consequence of (iv) above, there will be an increase to the external financing limit for the British Waterways Board of £582,000 from £52,690,000 to £53,272,000. This change will enable the Board to fund urgent works on the canal network.

(v) the DETR/LGR (Local Government Reorganisation) Non-Voted Cash Limit will be decreased by £750,000 from £126,550,000 to £125,800,000, reflecting savings on the Local Government Residuary Body's borrowing approvals. This saving will be used to offset an increase outside the cash limit on Class VI, Vote 4 (Local Government and Regional Policy, England) to pay for the costs of emergency financial assistance to local authorities.

(vi) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 5—Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions: administration—will be increased by £2,642,000 from £437,850,000 to £440,492,000. As a consequence of the changes to the Vote, the gross running cost limit for the Health and Safety Executive has increased by £249,000 from £156,696,000 to £156,945,000 and the gross running cost limit for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has decreased by £16,000 from £603,653,000 to £603,637,000.

The changes reflect the take-up of £2,500,000 of the available £6,000,000 capital end year flexibility as well as inter-vote transfers: from Class V, Vote 1 of £150,000 and Class IX, Vote 1 of £250,000 in respect of capital costs for the Government Offices for the Regions; from Class V, Vote 1 of £300,000, of which £249,000 will be classified as running costs, for the additional costs to the Health and Safety Commission in enforcing the Working Time Regulations; and, from Class VI, Vote 3 of £84,000 for the running costs from absorbing the functions of the UK Ecolabelling Board; offset by inter-vote transfers from this Vote to Class XIII, Vote 6 of £50,000 and Class XIV, Vote 3 of £50,000 for energy efficiency work and an increase in appropriations-in-aid of £542,000 for the Sale of PSA Services Businesses.

(vii) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 6—Transport Industries—will be increased by £130,000 from £75,060,000 to £75,190,000. The change is a result of increases in the latest estimates of the National Bus Company pensions case legal costs. London Underground's external finance limit will be increased by £69,000,000 from £523,250,000 to £592,250,000. This relates to the take-up of £29,000,000 capital end year flexibility and an inter-vote transfer from Class VI, Vote 2 of £40,000,000 in respect of the Croydon Tramlink.

(viii) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 11—Office of the Rail Regulator—will be increased by £120,000 from £8,800,000 to £8,920,000. This increase reflects the take-up of £120,000 capital end year flexibility. There will also be a reduction of £205,000 from £8,400,000 to £8,195,000 in running costs to be transferred to capital within the cash limit. Such additional funding will allow the scheduled maintenance and refurbishment of office space currently occupied by the Rail Users Consultative Committee (RUCC) for Scotland to proceed.

(ix) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 13—Ordnance Survey—will be increased by £9,200,000 from £3,762,000 to £12,962,000. The increase reflects investments and expenditure necessary for Ordnance Survey to prepare for the move to a Trading Fund on 1 April 1999 and results from a transfer from the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 1.

The overall increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Trans-European Networks

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the United Kingdom schemes that (a) have received and (b) will receive funding from the European Union in respect of trans-European networks, indicating in each case (i) the name of the scheme, (ii) the amount received, (iii) the total cost of the scheme and (iv) the proportion of (iii) represented by (ii) expressed as a percentage. [57692]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The details requested are in the following table. Trans-European Network (TEN) funding is paid in stages. Therefore it is necessary to distinguish between the amount of support awarded to a scheme and the amount actually received to date. Total estimated eligible costs for TEN support for a scheme are, in the case of ongoing projects for which further bids are expected to be made in future years, for the period 1995 to 1998 inclusive, and are not whole life scheme costs.

PRIME MINISTER

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions since 1 September 1998, when (a) he, (b) his advisers and (c) staff in the Cabinet Office have (i) received communications from and (ii) had discussions with (1) representatives of the US Government and (2) companies with a commercial interest in the development of GMOs, in respect of genetically modified organisms, indicating the nature of such communications and meetings. [57703]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 November 1998]: I, Ministers, advisers and other civil servants receive representations from and meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with representatives from foreign governments and with interest groups outside Government. By convention it is not the practice of governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available.

The Government's position on GMOs was explained on 21 October 1998 by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment to the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities, Sub-Committee D. Ministers have made it clear that public health and the protection of the environment are the Government's first priority on GMOs. On the same day I announced the establishment of a new Cabinet Committee to oversee developments in the area of biotechnology.

Pörtschach

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement on the proposed transfer of political powers from Her Majesty's Government to the WEU; [57918]

(2) if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the proposed transfer of military powers to the WEU. [57917]

The Prime Minister: This was an informal meeting of the Heads of Government at Pörtschach, in preparation for the full European Council in Vienna, at which a broad range of issues were discussed. No formal decisions were taken.

I refer the hon. Member to the Answer I gave today, Official Report, column 473, to the hon. Member for Windsor (Mr. Trend). The Government have not proposed to transfer political or military powers to the WEU.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if the proposals set out by Her Majesty's Government at Pörtschach on the establishment of a closer EU defence formation included extension of qualified majority voting; [58010]

(2) if he will make a statement on the differences between the proposals his Government set forward at Pörtschach on more integrated EU defence, and those established in the Treaty of Amsterdam; [58011]

(3) if he will list documents pertaining to the proposals of Her Majesty's Government to the Pörtschach Conference which his Government have distributed to other member states as regards closer defence co-operation. [58012]

The Prime Minister: This meeting of the Heads of Government was an informal meeting in preparation for the full European Council in Vienna, at which a broad range of issues were discussed. No formal decisions were taken.

At the meeting, I made clear my wish to see Europe examine ways of developing its defence identity. I did not put forward any detailed proposals and did not propose the extension of Qualified Majority Voting. The Government have not distributed any documents to other Member States of the European Union on closer defence co-operation. I stressed that NATO should remain the foundation of collective security. I made clear it that the starting point for discussion should be the 1996 Berlin decision on the European Security and Defence Identity and the Treaty of Amsterdam.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if he will establish a Royal Commission to review the effectiveness of and justification for animal experiments. [57875]

The Prime Minister: The Government are committed to ensuring that animals are used in scientific procedures only where this is fully justified. Furthermore, we are working to ensure that the highest possible standards of animal welfare are implemented.

We have, for example, already announced:

that we are promoting the development and use of alternatives (which reduce the number of animals used, refine procedures to minimise suffering, and replace animal use) where possible—the budget made available to the Animal Procedures Committee to sponsor research on alternatives has been increased by 42 per cent. and scientists will now be required to demonstrate what consideration they have given to the use of alternatives;

an end to the test of cosmetic products on animals; that we are exploring the possibility of extending this ban to cover cosmetic ingredients—in the meantime, no new licences to test cosmetic products or ingredients have been issued since May 1997;

a ban on the use of animals to test tobacco or alcohol products; that further funding has been secured to increase the complement of the Inspectorate from 18 to 21, seven new inspectors recruited to fill these and other vacancies;

that, through the European Commission, we are putting pressure on the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development to delete the LD50 test from its list of regulatory safety tests; that ethical review processes will be required in all establishments from April 1999;

a ban on the use of Great Apes (gorillas, chimpanzees, pygmy chimpanzees and orang-utans); that the use of ascitic animals in monoclonal antibody production will be phased out; and an increase to the number of animal welfare experts on the Animal Procedures Committee.

We have not ruled out a Royal Commission. The Government believe, however, that it is best to use the available resources to make immediate improvements to the operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 until such time as we are able to make a considered judgment about the merits of such a proposal.

Civil Servants

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what changes have been made to the arrangements for pre-election contacts between senior civil servants and opposition parties since the evidence by the then Head of the Civil Service to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on 27 November 1985; [57954]

(2) if the contacts between senior civil servants in the Treasury and the then shadow Chancellor before the 1997 General Election were directed exclusively to questions of organisation. [57955]

The Prime Minister: The current arrangements for pre-election contacts between senior civil servants and Opposition parties do not differ significantly from those in place in 1985. The only substantial change since 1985 was agreed after the 1992 General Election to take account of the fact that, under our electoral arrangements, it is only the last possible date for the next General Election that is known in advance. At the suggestion of the then Leader of the Opposition, the then Prime Minister agreed that it should be possible for such contacts to take place from 16 months before the 1992 Parliament would complete its maximum five-year term. Previously, contacts had been allowed to begin in the last six months of a five-year Parliament, an arrangement which was considered to have precluded effective contacts before the 1983 and 1987 General Elections.

The format for such contacts remains essentially the same as that set out by the then Head of the Home Civil Service in 1985. The purpose of the meetings is to allow Opposition parties to inform themselves of factual questions of departmental organisation and to inform senior civil servants of any organisational change of Government. Such meetings are confidential on both sides. These were the arrangements governing all contacts in the run-up to the 1997 Election.

Task Forces

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to require all task forces and equivalent bodies to publish their working papers and minutes on the Internet. [57774]

The Prime Minister: The Government encourage greater openness of public bodies, wherever practical and appropriate. The extent to which the records of any specific task force or review group are published or placed on the Internet is a matter for the relevant sponsoring Department.

Inter-ministerial Committees

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each of the inter-ministerial committees, indicating (a) when it was established, (b) who chairs it and (c) the frequency of its meetings. [57775]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the Answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Midlothian (Mr. Clarke) on 21 October 1998, Official Report, columns 1123–35.

Council of Europe (50th Anniversary)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Council of Europe. [56917]

The Prime Minister: We intend to mark the 50th anniversary of the Council of Europe in London on 5 May 1999 with an evening reception in St. James's Palace where the Statute was signed. We shall invite key representatives of the Council of Europe from Strasbourg and from foreign Governments, as well as a broad range of people from UK organisations most closely involved in Council of Europe activities. My right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor will also be making a speech in the Palace of Westminster on the same day. We have separately invited Lord Ponsonby of Shulbrede to chair the UK National Committee which will organise other events independently of Government.

Belfast Agreement

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to the request of the UN High Commissioner of Human Rights to be consulted about the structure and scope of bodies established as part of the Belfast Agreement. [56298]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on 2 November 1998, Official Report, column 403.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Profession (Recruitment)

35. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, what targets he has set to broaden recruitment within the legal profession. [56139]

Mr. Hoon: Recruitment to the legal professions is primarily a matter for the professions themselves. Both the Bar Council and the Law Society have adopted policies designed to ensure that entrance to the profession is based on merit alone. This is something which the Government strongly support.

Rights of Audience

36. Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, when he proposes to grant solicitors full rights of audience; and if those rights will be extended to barristers who have left private practice and are now employed. [56140]

Mr. Hoon: The Government published a consultation paper in June which set out our plans to extend the rights of audience both of solicitors in private practice and of employed barristers and solicitors. Extending rights of audience will require primary legislation, and I hope we will bring proposals before Parliament at an early opportunity.

Law Centres

37. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has for establishing law centres in areas which do not at present have them. [56142]

Mr. Hoon: Yesterday 2 November 1998, my right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor outlined our proposals for a Community Legal Service, which will aim to ensure that every area will have access to a comprehensive network of legal service providers, of consistently good quality, so that people with actual or potential legal problems are able to find the information and help they need. I hope Law Centres will play a full part in the Community Legal Service. A consultation document on the detail of our proposals for the Community Legal Service will be published early next year.

Judiciary (Criminal Investigations)

38. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, what is his Department's policy on the suspension with pay of members of the judiciary, pending criminal investigations. [56143]

Mr. Hoon: Each case must be considered on its own merits. However the Lord Chancellor would not normally consider it appropriate for a judge who was the subject of serious criminal proceedings to continue to sit pending the outcome of the case. Where the salary of a judge in such a position is protected by statute (as with Circuit Judges) salary must by law continue to be paid in full throughout this period. Such salary protection which prevents the salary of serving judges from being reduced or withheld whilst they continue to hold office is a vital part of securing the independence of the judiciary. Judges may be removed from office only in limited circumstances and subject to the relevant statutory provision. The Lord Chancellor may remove a Circuit Judge only on the grounds of misbehaviour or incapacity.

Ministerial Meetings (Law Society)

39. Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, how many times in the last 12 months he has met representatives of the Law Society; and what was discussed. [56144]

Mr. Hoon: In the last 12 months I have met representatives of the Law Society in a formal capacity on 7 occasions, to discuss conditional fees and legal aid, small claims, standard fees, the legal aid reforms, legal aid remuneration and the proposed changes to ancillary relief.

Family Law Act 1996

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if the first six information meeting pilots on the Family Law Act 1996 have been completed; and if he will place in the Library his Department's assessment of the success of the pilots. [56949]

Mr. Hoon: Three of the first six pilots closed in March 1998. Independent research relating to these and later pilots is still continuing.

Marriage Support Services

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what initiatives his Department has taken to assist marriage support services. [56950]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department currently provides core funding to six marriage support and research organisations. For the financial year 1998–99 further funding has been given to eight pilot and research projects. Nearly £3 million has been allocated this year. The Lord Chancellor has commissioned an independent review of the Department's funding of marriage support. Details will be announced shortly. The results of the review will assist the Lord Chancellor in developing a strategy for the effective allocation of resources to marriage support services.

SCOTLAND

Economy

11. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies his Department has made of the effects on the Scottish economy of the lower growth assumptions for the UK economy in 1998–99. [56111]

Mr. Dewar: The most recent independent forecast from Business Strategies Limited, published last month, suggests that growth in Scottish GDP will be slightly below UK growth in 1998 but will exceed UK growth in 1999. Unemployment in Scotland continues to fall, and employment to rise.

Incomes

13. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people he estimates in Scotland have household income below half of the national average; and what steps he is taking to alleviate the impact of poverty. [56114]

Mr. Macdonald: We estimate that some one million people in Scotland have incomes below half the national average. The Government are determined to tackle poverty and promote social inclusion and we are doing so by a range of policies which are designed, first, to support families; secondly, to provide opportunities for all who can to work; and thirdly, to provide security and protection for the most vulnerable.

Bankruptcy

14. Dr. Lynda Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the operation of bankruptcy law in Scotland. [56115]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Office is considering responses to a consultation paper on Apparent Insolvency which proposed amendments to the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985; and has recently held a follow up consultation on Protected Trust Deeds.

Government Spending

15. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of total per capita Government expenditure in Scotland in 1999–2000. [56116]

Mr. Dewar: The latest available estimate for Government spending per capita in Scotland is for 1995–96. The figure in that year was £6,010.

Scottish Parliament

16. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that Scottish service men are able to vote in the elections to the Scottish Parliament. [56117]

Mr. McLeish: Scottish service men and women are already provided for under existing legislation. We see no need for this to be amended. Provided that they have made a service declaration to appear on the register in Scotland they will be eligible to vote by proxy no matter where in the world they will be at the time of the elections to the Scottish Parliament.

17. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of the future Scottish Parliament on his accountability to hon. Members. [56118]

Mr. McLeish: The establishment of the Scottish Parliament will alter the range of issues for which the Secretary of State for Scotland is responsible. The Government intend to submit evidence to the Procedure Committee for its inquiry into the procedural consequences of devolution shortly.

27. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost of establishing a Scottish Parliament. [56130]

Mr. McLeish: The estimated construction costs of the building at Holyrood will be around £55 million, including site acquisition costs and demolition costs but not including fees and VAT. The actual cost will depend on the final design, and the price of construction, which will be determined by competitive tender.

The annual running costs of the Scottish Parliament will depend on a number of factors yet to be settled including the hours of operation. The current estimate is around £30 million.

A1

18. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will designate the A1 trunk road as a core national route. [56119]

Mr. Macdonald: The term "core national route" relates to nationally important routes in England. Decisions on priorities for trunk road investment in Scotland will be taken in the light of the current Strategic Roads Review.

Residential and Nursing Homes

19. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to modify the regulations covering the ownership, management and inspection of private residential homes and nursing homes for the elderly. [56121]

Mr. Galbraith: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave him on 4 November 1997, Official Report, column 156, and 17 March 1998, Official Report, column 569. These indicated that legislation on the regulation and inspection of residential and nursing home care and domiciliary care will follow when a suitable opportunity presents.

Cullen Report

20. Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to implement Lord Cullen's recommendations on the introduction of a national system to ensure that there are adequate checks on the suitability of youth leaders and workers. [56123]

Mr. Galbraith: We are discussing across Government a package of measures aimed at preventing unsuitable persons from obtaining access to children. We expect to announce our conclusions on this shortly.

Housing

22. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to improve the quality of Scotland's housing stock. [56125]

Mr. Macdonald: Almost £500 million of public money has been allocated for housing in Scotland in 1998/99 and an additional £300 million has been made available over the next three years linked, in particular, to the development of the New Housing Partnership initiative. These resources, together with the private finance which they will attract will provide new and improved stock in all housing tenures across Scotland. We are also improving housing quality by investing in home energy efficiency, linked to the New Deal, by the introduction of barrier free standards in new housing funded by Scottish Homes and by bringing empty houses back into use through the Empty Homes Initiative.

Further and Higher Education

23. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the higher and further education sector in Scotland to discuss funding levels. [56126]

Mrs. Liddell: On 26 October I met representatives of the Association of Scottish Colleges. We discussed funding for the further education sector, and the Association told me they welcomed the Government's announcement that we are to invest an additional £214 million into further education over the next three years, to support further increases in student numbers, enhance quality in delivery and stabilise the financial position of the sector.

On 30 October, I addressed a Forum of the Committee of Scottish Higher Education Principals at which, among other topics, funding was discussed. At the Forum I announced a further funding boost of £15 million for Scotland's Higher Education sector; this is in addition to the extra £230 million we are investing in Scottish higher education over the next three years. This additional funding will be vital in meeting the Government's objectives of widening access to higher education and modernising teaching and research to support a knowledge economy. It was, I believe, strongly welcomed by the higher education sector.

24. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the procedure for selection of boards of management of colleges of further and higher education in Scotland. [56127]

Mrs. Liddell: Schedule 2 to the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992 sets out the requirements regarding the composition of the Boards of Management of further education colleges, and eligibility criteria for their appointment. Beyond these statutory requirements, however, appointments to the boards of management are for individual institutions themselves to determine and I have no plans to review that procedure.

With assistance from the Department, the Association of Scottish Colleges (ASC) established a working group on college governance in 1997. Guidance was then issued by the ASC to the sector on issues such as written public appointment procedures and the operation of search and nomination committees. The guidance reflects the recommendations on public appointments set out in the second report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life. The ASC are presently surveying the extent to which Boards of Management have taken this guidance on board.

I expect Board procedures for the appointment of members to comply with the provisions of Schedule 2 to the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992 and have regard to the advice and recommendations of the Committee on Standards in Public Life.

Public Expenditure

25. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish local authorities regarding the level of public expenditure per head in 1998–99. [56128]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend meets the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities regularly to discuss a wide range of financial and other matters.

Manufacturing

26. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met Scottish Enterprise to discuss developments in the Scottish manufacturing sector. [56129]

Mr. Macdonald: I, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend Lord Macdonald of Tradeston have regular meetings with Scottish Enterprise to discuss a range of issues affecting the Scottish economy including developments in the Scottish manufacturing sector.

Fishing

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take measures to assist young people entering the Scottish fishing industry as skipper-owners. [56110]

Mr. Macdonald: There is help available for young fishermen wanting to become skippers through training programmes operated by the Sea Fish Industry Authority and by Local Enterprise Companies.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the use of closed circuit television for combating crime in Scotland. [56124]

Mr. McLeish: In January 1996, The Scottish Office published an evaluation report into the effectiveness of closed circuit television in combating crime and the fear of crime in Airdrie, where twelve open street CCTV cameras had been operating since 1992. A separate evaluation was subsequently undertaken on the Glasgow city centre CCTV scheme. A final report has been submitted by the researcher and is currently being prepared for publication.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) actual and (b) real increases in pay in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99 of public sector employees in Scotland. [56954]

Mr. Dewar: The information is as follows:

[2] Due in November

Notes:

1. The above public sector pay groups account for around 90 per cent. of Scottish public sector pay
2. As pay negotiations have been delegated to individual Civil Service Departments and to many NDPBs it is not possible to give a single meaningful figure for this sector
3. In 1997 the local government settlement was underpinned by a minimum rate of £4 per hour
4. The real term estimates of increases in pay have been made using the average "headline" RPI rate for the calendar years in question. For 1998 the deflator used is the average for the year to date

Equality in Employment

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that local authorities require suppliers and contractors of services to promote equality in employment and non-discrimination. [56959]

Mr. McLeish: Good procurement practice is essential if local government is to obtain real improvements to service cost and quality under Best Value. I recognise the restrictions the Local Government Act 1988 places on local authority tendering. Legislation amending the existing provisions is likely to be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Intestate Succession Rules

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to amend the current rules of intestate succession to allow surviving cohabitants or step-children who are neither the natural children of the deceased nor adopted by them to apply to a court for a discretionary provision out of the estate of the deceased. [57394]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Law Commission, in its 1992 Report on Family Law, recommended that a surviving cohabitant should be able to apply to a court for a discretionary provision out of the deceased's estate, whether or not there is a will. I hope to issue a consultation paper shortly on family law in Scotland, in which I shall be asking for views on this recommendation.

The Scottish Law Commission has also considered the position of step-children in the law of succession in Scotland, but did not make any recommendation on this in its 1990 Report on Succession. It did recommend that natural and adopted children of the deceased should have a fixed share of the estate. I am, however, seeking views on an alternative suggestion that children should only be able to claim from the estate the amount that the deceased would have owed them as aliment had he or she lived. Under such a system step-children who had been accepted as children of the family could be owed aliment and would have a claim on the estate.

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the health trusts in Scotland to discuss the proposed reorganisation of the NHS trusts in Scotland. [56112]

Mr. Galbraith: I chair meetings of Chairmen and General Managers of Health Boards and Chairmen and Chief Executives of Trusts on a quarterly basis. The options for Trust configuration were the subject of widespread consultation by Health Boards and, in making their recommendations, Health Boards took the views expressed into account. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I announced the reduction in the number of NHS Trusts from 46 to 28 on 3 September. We remain committed to ensuring that the new configuration of Trusts will reduce bureaucracy so that the maximum amount of resources are available for direct investment in patient care.

Proscribed Organisations

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice has been given and what administrative guidelines issued to ensure that an arrested person is aware of the implications of failing to mention a material fact concerning the offence of belonging to a proscribed and specified organisation; and if he will place in the Library a copy of such documents. [56319]

Mr. McLeish: A letter was sent to Scottish Chief Constables on 15 September outlining the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998. The letter advised that a special warning be given to anyone being questioned about membership of a specified organisation, so that they are aware of the implications of failing to mention a fact material to the offence. I have placed a copy of the letter in the Library. A Scottish Office Circular of guidance on the Act will be issued shortly.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many individuals have been (a) charged, (b) summarily convicted and (c) convicted on indictment under section 2 or the equivalent section of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 relating to membership of a proscribed organisation in each year since enactment; what percentage of those convicted in each year received a prison sentence; and what percentage of those were sentenced to a term of less than one year. [56318]

Mr. McLeish: On the basis of the latest information, no individuals have been proceeded against or convicted in Scottish courts for an offence under Section 2 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989, or equivalent sections.

Cancer Deaths

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what proportion of deaths in Scotland were due to cancer in each of the last five years. [56983]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is given in the table.

Cancer[1] deaths in Scotland, 1993–1997

Year	Number of deaths from cancer	As a percentage of all deaths
1993	15,458	24.1
1994	15,164	25.6
1995	15,224	25.2
1996	15,171	25.0
1997	14,889	25.0

[1] Underlying cause of death categories included—International Classification of Diseases etc., ninth revision (ICD 9), codes 140–208, malignant neoplasms.

Council Housing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which tenants' organisations in Scotland he has met to discuss stock transfers of council housing. [56120]

Mr. Macdonald: I have met the Scottish Tenants' Organisation and some of its affiliated federations of tenants on a number of occasions to discuss general housing issues, including stock transfers.

Job Losses

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the number of job losses in Scotland over the last two months. [56122]

Mr. Macdonald: In recent weeks there have been several significant job loss and job creation announcements. The net balance of these job losses and gains can be judged only some months afterwards, as company plans often change. The latest official figures on a non-seasonally adjusted basis show that, over the year to June-August 1998, ILO unemployment in Scotland fell by 26,000 and that total employment increased by 13,000.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's current estimate of the cost to be borne by Scottish local authorities on spending to cope with the problem of the date 2000 on computers in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000 and of the contribution from central Government towards meeting these costs. [56961]

Mr. McLeish: There is no central estimate of the total cost to local government. It is for each local authority to form its own estimate of cost and to consider how costs are to be met within the funds available. The priority is to ensure that every authority is in fact tackling the issue. To that end, the Scottish Office is funding a post of Year 2000 project manager in COSLA. In addition, and as a result of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review, £10 million has been included in the 1999–2000 local government finance settlement. No provision was made in 1998–99.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Northern Ireland Questions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on future handling of Northern Ireland questions following the permanent establishment of a Northern Ireland Assembly. [56401]

Mrs. Beckett: The establishment of the Northern Ireland Assembly will reduce the direct responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and consequently the matters for which she is accountable to the House. I have no immediate plans to alter the arrangements for Northern Ireland questions. The Procedure Committee is conducting an inquiry into the procedural consequences of devolution and this is one of the subjects I expect them to address. I will be giving evidence to that Committee soon.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Holding Centres

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how and when she intends to respond to the principal recommendations of the Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres in his most recent report. [56402]

Mr. Ingram: Following consultation with relevant interested parties, the Secretary of State wrote to the Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres on 26 August 1998 in response to matters raised in his Fifth Annual Report. A copy of that letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals have been detained in each of the holding centres in each month since September 1997. [56385]

Mr. Ingram: The following table shows the number of persons detained in each of the Holding Centres since September 1997:

Year	Month	Castlereagh	Gough	Strand Road
1997	September	21	12	1

	September	35	25	0
Total		434	144	13

Note:
Castlereagh Holding Centre was closed for refurbishment during the period October to December 1997

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 6 November 1997, Official Report, column 293, on what date she replied to the Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres; and on what date her letter was deposited in the Library. [56386]

Mr. Ingram: I wrote to the Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres on 23 February 1998 in response to a number of outstanding matters raised in his Fourth Annual Report which the Secretary of State had been unable to address in her earlier letter to him of 26 September 1997. My letter was inadvertently not placed in the Library of the House at that time. I have now made arrangements for this to be done.

The Secretary of State's letter of 26 September 1997, together with my letter of 23 February 1998, represents the Government's full response to the Independent Commissioner's Fourth Annual Report.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) male, (b) female, (c) under 18 year old, (d) 18 to 25 year old, (e) over 25 year old, (i) republican, (ii) loyalist and (iii) other suspects have been detained in the holding centres in the 12 months from September 1997 to September 1998. [56384]

Mr. Ingram: Set out are the numbers of males and females detained at each of the three holding centres during the period September 1997 to September 1998.

The RUC does not hold information in the form necessary to answer the question in full. A manual check of the records of each of the centres would be required; this could not be done within the timescale allowed for reply and would incur disproportionate costs.

Flags and Emblems

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance is available for non-departmental public bodies concerning displays of flags and emblems; how many NDPBs displayed the Union Flag at least once in the last 12 months; and if he will list those NDPBs that displayed a union flag on 12 July. [56291]

Mr. Paul Murphy: NDPBs in Northern Ireland are aware of the guidance contained in the Fair Employment Commission's Code of Practice relating to the display of flags and emblems. The Union Flag is flown on Government Buildings on a number of scheduled days during the year and, while NDPBs are made aware of these dates, it is a matter for each body to exercise its own discretion as to whether or not the flag should be flown.

Information on how many NDPBs displayed the Union Flag at least once in the last twelve months and those which displayed it on 12 July could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many days and on what occasions in the last year the Union Flag was flown outside the (a) Northern Ireland Electricity regional offices on the Campsie industrial estate and (b) other offices of the NIE. [56290]

Mr. Ingram: Information on the flying of the Union Flag by private companies is not held by Government. I understand that Northern Ireland Electricity issued a statement on 11 August 1998 setting out the company's policy on the display of flags and emblems.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 27 November 1997, Official Report, column 630, what were the staffing levels of the RUC in September 1998 (i) in total, and (ii) broken down (a) by gender, (b) by perceived religious/community origin and (c) by numbers and percentages of full-time, reserve full-time, and reserve part-time staff. [56387]

Mr. Ingram: The table sets out the information requested as at 1 September 1998.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) serving and (b) former members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary held personal protection firearms on 10 April; how many new weapons have been issued since then; and how many weapons have been handed in. [56293]

Mr. Ingram: Figures detailing how many serving and former members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary held firearms for personal protection are not available for 10 April 1998, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, on 26 October 1998, 12,699 handguns (which are available for personal protection) were on official issue to serving members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and 619 were on loan to former members.

Since 10 April a total of 189 handguns have been issued to serving Royal Ulster Constabulary members and 306 have been returned.

Prisoners (Accelerated Release)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners have applied to the Prison Sentence Review Commission for an accelerated release date; on how many cases the commission has made a determination; and for unsuccessful applications, what reasons were given. [56393]

Mr. Ingram: Statutory responsibility for these matters lies with the Sentence Review Commissioners. I have asked the joint Chairmen, Mr. Brian Currin and Sir John Blelloch, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Sir John Blelloch to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 3 November 1998:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for information concerning applications made under the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998. In her answer the Secretary of State advised that, as statutory responsibility for this matter lay with the Sentence Review Commissioners, I would reply.

I can advise that, up until 29 October 1998, 512 prisoners have applied to the Sentence Review Commissioners for a declaration that they are eligible for release in accordance with the provisions of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998. Of these, 221 prisoners have received substantive determinations advising that their applications had been successful. There have been no substantive determinations advising that the applicant had been unsuccessful.

A copy of this letter will be placed in the library of the House of Commons.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the qualifying prisoners whose release has been accelerated as a result of a determination made by the sentence review commission, in each case indicating the (a) nature of the offence, (b) date of conviction, (c) original sentence, (d) sentencing jurisdiction, (e) original release date after remission or estimated on the basis of average figures in the case of life sentences and (f) accelerated release date. [56390]

Mr. Ingram: Statistical information in the format requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Details of individual prisoners are not given for sensitivity and safety considerations; however, I will arrange for a written reply to be made to my hon. Friend which will detail available statistical information on prisoner releases which have been accelerated as a result of determinations made by the Sentence Review Commissioners.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate, on the basis of those prisoners who have been given accelerated release dates and those who would expect to be released in the next two years, how many prisoners will be released in each month up to August 2000. [56391]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested is not readily available in the detail specified in the question and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, similar information was provided on the basis of quarterly projections in my response to the hon. Member for East Londonderry (Mr. Ross) on 2 November 1998, Official Report, columns 363–64.

Military Strategy

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the meetings and describe the other steps taken to prepare the publication of an overall review of military strategy in Northern Ireland. [56380]

Mr. Ingram: I have regular and frequent meetings with the Chief Constable, and with officials, to discuss security related issues. Before the end of the month I intend to publish a strategy paper setting out our approach to normalisation.

Proscribed Organisations

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what advice has been given, and what administrative guidelines issued, to ensure that an arrested person is aware of the implications of failing to mention a material fact concerning the offence of belonging to a proscribed and specified organisation; and if she will place in the Library a copy of such documents. [56289]

Mr. Ingram: A letter was sent on 11 September 1998 to the Chief Constable of the RUC outlining the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 and suggesting a form of words for an additional special warning be given to anyone being questioned about membership of a specified organisation, in order that they are aware of the implications of failing to mention a fact material to the offence. The letter also emphasises that inferences can be drawn only where the accused has had access to a solicitor before questioning. A copy of the letter is being placed in the Library today. Further advice on the administration of the 1998 Act will be issued in due course.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current prison population of members or associates of each specified proscribed organisation. [56392]

Mr. Ingram: Information is held for management purposes in relation to the perceived paramilitary association of prisoners where applicable. It should be noted, however, that with the exception of HMP Maze where such links are more clearly defined, this information is based on a combination of factors including the offence, sympathies and associates. These figures do not include prisoners who are regarded as having only either Loyalist or Republican sympathies.

The most recent statistics for the week commencing 26 October 1998 are as follows:

	UDA	UVF	LVF	UFF	RHC	PIRA	INLA
HMP Maze	73	65	19	—	—	112	26
HMP Maghaberry	37	24	11	6	4	16	14

Border Crossing Points

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has received concerning the re-opening of border crossing points BCP 92 and BCP 93; and what further plans she has for these roads. [56383]

Mr. Ingram: While I am not aware of any representations received concerning the re-opening of border crossing points BCP 92 and BCP 93, consideration is being given to their future.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will report progress on making good (a) Border Crossing Point 171 at Aghalane Bridge, County Fermanagh and (b) other border crossing points not yet restored to full usage after the lifting of closure orders. [56382]

Mr. Ingram: Work is progressing satisfactorily at Border Crossing point 171, and the bridge should be ready for use by Spring 1999.

There are only two other Border Crossing points which remain unopened since the revocation of closure orders: Border Crossing Points 92 and 93 in South Tyrone. I have no immediate plans to re-open the road at Annaghroe or the bridge at Knockaginny Wood.

Murray Judgment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to introduce legislation to comply with the Murray judgment at the European Court of Human Rights. [56292]

Mr. Ingram: The Government are actively considering their response to the ECHR judgment in the case of John Murray v the United Kingdom and hope to be able to make an announcement in the near future which will outline how procedures in England, Wales and Northern Ireland are to be affected.

The Government have already incorporated the ECHR ruling in the provisions contained in the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998.

Vehicle Checkpoints

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the location of permanent vehicle checkpoints in (i) September 1997 and (ii) October 1998, indicating where structures have been dismantled or removed. [56381]

Mr. Ingram: The locations of permanent vehicle checkpoints in Northern Ireland in September 1997 and October 1998 are as follows:

As at September 1997	As at October 1998
Cloghogue (Newry/Dublin Road)	PVCP removed—Patrol Base still in use
Aughnacloy	To be removed (announced 30 September)
Bessbrook (3)	Reduced structures but still in use
Mahon Road, Portadown (2)	Removed
Letterkenny Road, Londonderry	Inactive and vacated but structure still present
Muff, Culmore Road, Londonderry	Inactive and vacated but structure still present
The Hump, Strabane	Inactive and vacated but structure still present
Rosscor Bridge	Inactive but structure still present
Wattle Bridge	Inactive but structure still present
Mullan Bridge	Inactive but structure still present
Gortmullan	Inactive but structure still present
Annaghmartin	Inactive but structure still present
Killyvilly	Inactive but structure still present
Clonalty Bridge	Inactive but structure still present
Belfast International Airport	Inactive and vacated but structure still present

In September 1997 there were 18 permanent vehicle checkpoints in Northern Ireland. Only three are still in operation, for the protection of the security force base at Bessbrook, Country Down. Two have been totally removed, one partially (the adjacent patrol base is still occupied). A further 8 structures are still present and manned, although the checkpoint is inactive. Three others have been vacated by the security forces. The remaining one at Aughnacloy will be demolished shortly.The continuing need for permanent vehicle checkpoints is kept under constant review. Any further changes will depend on the assessment of threat at the time.

Police Authority

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total work force of the Northern Ireland Police Authority, including staff seconded from the Civil Service; if she will list the principal occupational sub-divisions or descriptive groups of staff; and what is their composition in respect of (a) gender and (b) perceived religious/community origin. [56388]

Mr. Ingram: At 1 January 1998 the total workforce of the Police Authority, including staff seconded from the Civil Service, was 3,402.

The total workforce has been broken down by Standard Occupational Classification.

Tables 1(a) and 2(a) provide a breakdown by perceived religious origin. Tables 1(b) and 2(b) provide a breakdown by gender.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many buildings comprise the police estate; if she will cost and itemise major works projects (a) completed over the last 12 months and (b) already underway, initiated or committed in the next 12 months; how many part-time police stations are currently in operation; and what savings are estimated in the next 12 months as a result of the improved security situation. [56389]

Mr. Ingram: In pursuance of section 4 of the Police Act (NI) 1970, the Police Authority for Northern Ireland maintains 167 buildings. Eight of these premises are wholly or partially used for the purposes of the Police Authority.

(a) Over the last 12 months two new stations were built at Coagh and Loughgall costing £1,600,000 and £1,690,000 respectively. A further £3,100,000 was spent on 35 other projects, mainly in the areas of fire certification, health and safety and general upgrading of accommodation.

(b) Twenty-five major projects totalling £4,500,000 are currently underway or are scheduled to be committed within the next 12 months. No new builds are involved and apart from two major health and safety projects (£850,000 for the provision of flat roof edge protection and £560,000 for asbestos related work) the bulk of the money has again been allocated to fire certification work and general improving of accommodation.

The number of part-time RUC stations currently in operation is 64.

Information regarding

"what savings are estimated in the next 12 months as a result of the improved security situation" is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Family Policy

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make an announcement on family policy. [58336]

Mr. Straw: On Wednesday 4 November, at 9am, the Government will publish a consultation document, 'Supporting Families'. Copies of the document will be placed in the Library and will be available from the Vote Office.

Telecommunications (Interception)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it a requirement for an application for a warrant to be made where (a) MI5 and (b) the Police wish to obtain information from telecommunications operatives in respect of call origins, destination, duration and frequency; [57571]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 299, when he intends to introduce legislation (a) to bring interception on private networks into the statutory framework and (b) to introduce further measures to regulate interception of communication. [57573]

Mr. Straw: During the debate on the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Bill on 2 September 1998, Official Report, column 749, I announced that I had put in hand a comprehensive review of the interception regime, and that a consultation document on this would be published in due course. The consultation document will address private side interception and access to data held by telecommunications operators. Legislation will be introduced at the next opportunity.

Terrorist Attacks (Chemical Weapons)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans are in place to protect the public from terrorist attacks involving chemical weapons, with particular reference to the areas around American bases. [57312]

Mr. Straw: A series of classified contingency plans exist for responding to a wide range of terrorist threats including those which might involve the threatened or actual use of chemical weapons. In the interests of national security and the protection of the public these are regularly reviewed, tested and updated in the light of changing circumstances. The same arrangements apply at those sites made available to the United States Visiting Forces as at any other sites in the United Kingdom which might be vulnerable to attack.

Surveillance Systems

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what controls exist to regulate in respect of computer-controlled surveillance systems capable of identifying faces (a) those persons programmed to be identified and (b) the use made of the information gleaned; [57716]

(2) what assessment he has made of the civil liberties implications of (a) the use of and (b) the safeguards applicable to the operation of the computer-controlled surveillance system in Newham. [57715]

Mr. Straw: The Data Protection Act 1984 regulates the use of automatically processed information relating to individuals. With limited exceptions, holders of such information must register with the Data Protection Registrar and comply with the Act's legally enforceable data protection principles. Among other things, these require personal data to be obtained and processed fairly and lawfully, held only for specified and lawful purposes and not used or disclosed incompatibly with these purposes. I understand that the Data Protection Registrar will be meeting the Metropolitan Police and the London Borough of Newham in the near future to ensure that the necessary safeguards are in place to ensure compliance with the principles.

Any closed circuit television (CCTV) systems recording images of individuals which do not come within the ambit of the 1984 Act are expected to be covered by the Data Protection Act 1998. This gives wider enforcement powers to the Registrar, who will be re-titled Data Protection Commissioner. They include a new power to issue codes of practice as to good practice. Although these would not have direct statutory force, they would amplify how the enforceable data protection principles should be applied to the data use concerned. I understand that the Registrar has begun preparatory work on the preparation of a code of practice for CCTV.

Security Services

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that access to personal files held by MI5 is restricted to those with a clear need to see them, and that there are detailed audit trails to identify which officers or sections have had access to that information, and the reasons for that access. [57565]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service already has in place procedures to ensure that access to its personal files is restricted to those with a need to see them, and audit arrangements which track and record internal access to any file.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to require an independent assessment to be carried out before any decision by MI5 to destroy files is implemented. [57567]

Mr. Straw: The case for independent scrutiny of the destruction of Security Service files is under consideration including the circumstances where this might be appropriate and the form such scrutiny might take.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that files held by MI5 that are marked for destruction or might reasonably be thought to be so classified had they been assessed, are not used for vetting purposes. [57566]

Mr. Straw: Those Security Service files that have been reviewed and marked for destruction have been withdrawn from the Service's central file index and are not available to desk officers for any purpose. Those old and closed files, which have yet to be reviewed for destruction, remain centrally recorded but the Security Service may neither carry out inquiries into the subject nor add substantive information to the file. The current policy is that the Service will not apply information from its records in response to vetting inquiries merely on account of the subject's membership of organisations once considered to be subversive.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many individuals information is held by MI5 by means of computerised indices. [57564]

Mr. Straw: In my statement to the House on 29 July 1998, Official Report, columns 251–54, I made public for the first time information concerning the number of files held by the Security Service, including the number of files on which inquiries may be made. I do not propose to disclose further details about the Service's record management systems.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rights he proposes to introduce for individuals upon whom files are held by MI5. [57568]

Mr. Straw: In its latest Report, the Intelligence and Security Committee indicated that it intends to consider the question of whether individuals should have rights in connection with any Security Service files held on them. I shall await the Committee's findings before deciding whether to make any changes to the existing arrangements.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to allow renewal of project licence applications to be subject to independent assessment of non-animal alternatives before deciding whether or not to grant them. [57714]

Mr. George Howarth: We have undertaken to delete from the notes, for the completion of application forms for licences and certificates, the phrase "Your application will be treated in confidence at all stages". However, section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures)

Act 1986 remains in force and we will not be able to disclose information that either has been given in confidence or we have reasonable grounds for believing was given in confidence. It remains the duty of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate to advise on applications.

Section 24 of the 1986 Act will be reviewed under our proposals for freedom of information legislation.

Intelligence and Security Committee

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the proposal of the Intelligence and Security Committee to give itself an additional investigative capacity. [57570]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 21 of the Government Response to the Intelligence and Security Committee's Annual Report, which was published on 28 October 1998 (Cm 4089).

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to visit (a) Switzerland and (b) the Netherlands to study their illegal drug use reduction policies. [56915]

Mr. George Howarth: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to visit either Switzerland or the Netherlands to discuss drugs policies. Home Office officials are, however, in regular contact with their counterparts responsible for drug use reduction policies in those countries, through the Council of Europe and, in the case of the Netherlands, the European Union.

Juries

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to restrict the use of juries in criminal trials in the Crown courts. [56141]

Mr. Boateng: We have published two consultation papers this year about jury trials. The first paper, on use of juries in serious fraud trials, invited views on the principle of whether the system is likely to operate better and with a greater degree of public confidence if, in a small number of complex fraud trials, a traditional jury were to be replaced by another method of determining the facts. Views were also sought on four possible alternative methods of trial. The consultation paper on determining the mode of trial considered whether defendants should continue to be able to choose to be tried by a jury in cases which magistrates have indicated that they would be content to hear. We are currently considering the responses to both these consultation exercises.

Police

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the formula to be used to allocate resources to the areas transferring out of the Metropolitan Police to neighbouring police forces and the methodology used in its derivation. [57572]

Kate Hoey: The principal police funding formula will continue to be used to determine resource allocations for all forces and will be published in the Police Grant Report. The forces bordering the Metropolitan Police District (MPD) have indicated that there will be additional costs in 1999–2000 associated with the proposed changes to the MPD boundaries. We are considering their bids for extra funding to help meet these transitional costs. No decisions have yet been taken about the allocation of funding to forces bordering the Metropolitan Police or other forces for 1999–2000 or beyond. We expect to announce provisional funding allocations for 1999–2000 and the formula used in a draft Police Grant Report to be published towards the end of the year.

Hemp

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on licence fee levels for the growing of hemp. [58254]

Mr. George Howarth: The licence fee for hemp cultivation was reviewed in 1997 in consultation with the National Farmers Union and representatives of the industry. The new annual fee has been set at £320; this is being phased in over this year and the next two.

Stolen Vehicles

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the benefits of using laser-scanners to track stolen vehicles by reading licence plates. [58268]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office and the Association of Chief Police Officers are currently considering how the most effective use can be made of automatic number plate recognition technology for law enforcement purposes.

Belmarsh Prison

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what identity documents are required to be produced by people visiting prisoners at Belmarsh Prison. [57337]

Mr. George Howarth: Any of the following documents are accepted as proof of identity for visitors to prisoners at Belmarsh:

- Driving Licence
- Passport
- Utilities Bill
- Rent Book
- Benefit Book
- Immigration Papers
- Medical Card
- Letters on Official Headed Notepaper.

Domestic visitors to Category A prisoners are subject, in addition, to the Approved Visitors Scheme, which includes mandatory photographic identification which is verified by the local police.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities are available at Belmarsh Prison to allow visits to prisoners by disabled people. [57336]

Mr. George Howarth: Wheelchair access is possible to the three areas of Belmarsh prison where visits take place. Male and female disabled toilets are available in the main visits hall. On entry to the prison disabled visitors are searched in a private cubicle.

Electoral Register

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Register of Electors is made available in electronic form to commercial mailing companies. [58253]

Mr. George Howarth: Regulation 55 of the Representation of the People Regulations 1986 gives electoral registration officers a discretionary power to supply electronic data copies of the register to non-electoral users. A fee is charged to cover the costs incurred.

The sale of the electoral register is being considered by the Working Party on Electoral Procedures, which I chair, following a short consultation exercise in the summer. One of the issues to be explored further will be the availability of copies of the register and the fee charged.

Firearms (Licence Fees)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the shotgun licence fee. [58266]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have made it clear that they intend to review the fees charged for firearm and shotgun certificates in due course to see if any changes might be made to the current arrangements. Fees have always been set at a level that covers the cost of administration, and the Government have no intention of raising these to punitive levels.

Following the Dunblane tragedy, and the subsequent legislation, there has been a rise in the amount of work that the police are required to carry out in administering the licensing system. On this basis, it is only proper and realistic for us to look again at fee levels.

Proscribed Organisations

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice has been given, and what administrative guidelines issued, to ensure that an arrested person is aware of the implications of failing to mention a material fact concerning the offence of belonging to a proscribed and specified organisation; and if he will place in the Library a copy of such documents. [56316]

Mr. Straw: A letter was sent on 11 September to all Chief Officers of Police in England and Wales outlining the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 and advising that where a suspect has been arrested for an offence relating to membership of a proscribed organisation which is also specified, the interviewing officer should give a special warning after the standard caution. I have placed a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals have been (a) charged, (b) summarily convicted and (c) convicted on indictment under section 2 or the equivalent section of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 relating to membership of a proscribed organisation in each year since enactment; what percentage of those convicted in each year received a prison sentence; and what percentage of those were sentenced to a term of less than one year. [56315]

Mr. Straw: Information is not collected centrally on the number of people charged.

We have no record of any prosecutions or convictions in England and Wales for offences under section 2 since the 1989 Act came into force.

Special Secure Units

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are presently detained in each special secure unit, stating (a) the nature of crimes for which the prisoner was convicted, (b) the national origin or citizenship of the prisoner, (c) their special category status, (d) how long the prisoner has been housed in an SSU and (e) how many three-monthly medical examinations have been conducted in that time. [56337]

Mr. George Howarth: On 29 October 1998, five prisoners were held in Special Secure Units (SSUs), four at Whitemoor and one at Belmarsh. Only prisoners categorised as Category A-Exceptional Escape Risk are held in SSUs.

The table gives the information requested including the number of three monthly medical reviews conducted. These reviews are part of the operating standards for SSUs and are provided in addition to the normal health care facilities available to every prisoner. Formal medical reviews were phased in during 1997.

Category A exceptional escape risk prisoners held in special secure units

Nationality	Offence	Time spent in SSU	Number of three monthly health reviews
American	Murder	3 years 5 months	5
British	Drugs offences	7 months	2
Colombian	Drugs offences	1 year 3 months	4
Turkish	Drugs offences	5 years 4 months	5
Turkish	Drugs offences	3 months	1

Irish Prisoners (European Convention)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has given to officials responding to Irish prisoners who seek repatriation under the European Convention for Sentenced Prisoners and are concerned that their application may be affected by the sentence review legislation required under the Belfast Agreement. [56338]

Mr. George Howarth: Officials deal with repatriation applications in accordance with Government policy.

Diarmuid O'Neill

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will order that copies of statements provided by police to the coroner be made available to the relatives of Diarmuid O'Neill at least four weeks prior to the opening of the resumed inquest into his death. [56339]

Mr. George Howarth: My right hon. Friend has no powers to direct the release of documents in connection with an inquest, but, wherever possible, we hope that information can be provided to families in advance.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he received the Police Complaints Authority report on the death of Diarmuid O'Neill; what prosecutions or disciplinary actions were recommended in the report; on what date the inquest will be resumed; on what dates the relatives of the deceased were informed of the circumstances of his death; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [56317]

Mr. Boateng: The police investigation has been completed and copies of the report have recently been sent to the Police Complaints Authority (PCA), Her Majesty's Coroner and the Crown Prosecution Service. PCA investigation reports are not normally sent to the Home Secretary or made public.

Decisions as to any criminal or disciplinary action to be taken are matters for the Crown Prosecution Service, the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police and the PCA. If the cause of death and the circumstances in which it occurred have not already been established in the course of criminal proceedings, the coroner may resume the inquest once the criminal proceedings are completed to inquire into these questions.

Schengen Agreement

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if signatories of the Schengen Agreement now recognise the certificate of identity otherwise known as the brown British travel documents; what has been the impact of their policy on (a) those given exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom and (b) those unable to obtain a travel document or passport from their own country who have indefinite leave to remain; and what steps his Department has taken on this matter. [57720]

Kate Hoey: The Certificate of Identity issued to certain foreign nationals living in the United Kingdom is issued in accordance with international custom, complies with International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO) standards, and guarantees the holder's return to this country within its validity. However, we are aware that some holders of these documents experience difficulties when applying for visas to travel both within Europe and beyond.

It is a matter for the competent authorities of each country to decide whether to accept into their territory an individual or the holder of a particular type of document. This is not something over which the issuing authority can exert any influence.

Hillsborough Disaster

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department where (a) transcripts and (b) all additional material arising out of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's scrutiny of the evidence relating to the Hillsborough disaster are held; and in what form. [57477]

Mr. Boateng: Transcripts of meetings, prepared by Harry Counsel and Co., are held in paper form at the Home Office. Additional material arising out of the scrutiny is also held in paper form at the Home Office. Copies of as much as possible of the evidence considered by Lord Justice Stuart-Smith have been placed in the Library. The scrutiny papers do not form part of the material held by South Yorkshire Police.

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if South Yorkshire Police hold (a) transcripts and (b) the additional material arising out of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's scrutiny of the evidence relating to the Hillsborough disaster on computer disk. [57478]

Mr. Boateng: South Yorkshire Police do not hold copies of either transcripts or additional material arising out of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's scrutiny of the Hillsborough disaster. Hard copies of these documents are held on file at the Home Office.

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if South Yorkshire Police hold the (a) statements, (b) amended statements and (c) other documentation collected by West Midlands police during the investigation of the Hillsborough disaster on computer disk. [57480]

Mr. Boateng: All statements collected by West Midlands Police during the investigation into the Hillsborough disaster, including the amended statements by South Yorkshire Police officers, are held by South Yorkshire Police in their original paper form, and also on the HOLMES computer. Other documents collected by West Midlands Police are also held by South Yorkshire Police in their original form, but were not entered on the HOLMES computer.

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if statements collected by West Midlands Police in respect of the Hillsborough investigation were entered on the Holmes computer. [57481]

Mr. Boateng: I can confirm that statements collected by West Midlands Police in respect of the Hillsborough investigation were entered on the HOLMES computer.

Police Statements

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what length of time statements entered on the Holmes computer are retained and what arrangements are made for their archival storage when they are removed from the computer system. [57479]

Mr. Boateng: I understand that under rules developed by the Crime Committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers, information, such as witness statements, generated during a police investigation and entered onto Holmes is retained on the computer while the case remains active and then transferred to magnetic tape for archival storage. Information relating to closed cases for which a life sentence has been awarded is retained for the life of the convicted offender. For determinate sentences, the data are retained until all the appeal procedures have been exhausted, until the release of the offender, or for six years, whichever is the longer. Information relating to unsolved investigations or closed cases of national importance is retained indefinitely.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the capacity of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to deal with outstanding appeals. [57401]

Mr. Boateng: The Board's programme, which we have approved, aims to clear appeals and other hearings cases at an annual rate of 10,000 so that the remaining work is completed by March 2000. The membership of the Board is currently 49 senior lawyers operating on a part-time basis. They are supported by legal and administrative staff. Given the increased complexity of the remaining cases, Lord Carlisle of Bucklow QC, the Board's Chairman, knows that we are open to recommendations as to the complement and composition of the Board and he has put forward two additional appointments for consideration. One additional Scottish member has recently been appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board originating in each year since 1990 (a) were completed at first instance, (b) were agreed at first instance, (c) were refused at first instance and (d) subsequently went to appeal. [57397]

Mr. Boateng: Comprehensive data are not available by year of receipt of the claim. The table gives data on cases resolved at first instance in 1990–91 to 1997–98.

Year	Single member decisions accepted	Awards made	Claims refused
1990–91	44,179	32,135	12,044
1991–92	49,009	35,268	13,741
1992–93	47,462	32,893	14,569
1993–94	53,680	33,982	19,698
1994–95[1]	44,528	27,924	16,604
1995–96	65,990	42,124	23,866
1996–97[2]	53,824	32,906	20,918
1997–98	12,012	8,014	3,998

[1] The first Tariff Scheme was introduced on 1 April 1994 and withdrawn on 5 April 1995. During that period there were thus no new claims for assessment by the CICB, but all that year's intake reverted to such assessment from April 1995.

[2] The Tariff-based Scheme made under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act 1995 became effective for all claims received on or after 1 April 1996.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board are yet to be resolved for each year since 1990. [57399]

Mr. Boateng: The position at 30 September 1998 was:

Year of receipt of original claim	Appeal/hearings cases to be resolved
Pre-1990	240
1990	162
1991	365
1992	525
1993	862
1994	2,656
1995	6,887
1996[1]	3,395
Total	[2]15,092

[1] 31 March 1996 was the final date on which a claim under the 1990 scheme was received.

[2] The total includes a number of cases resolved in previous years but re-opened on medical grounds.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the period of time that applicants to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board wait for their cases to be processed. [57403]

Mr. Boateng: The 1990 common law based damages scheme administered by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board was replaced for claims received on or after 1 April 1996 by the Tariff-based scheme, administered by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority. The new scheme is designed to be simpler and faster in processing cases. At 1 April 1996, the Board had some 110,000 unresolved claims. By 30 September 1998 that figure had been reduced to 17,490, which reflects good progress in the planned, orderly clearance of the Board's remaining work by March 2000. The 92,510 1990 scheme claims thus resolved, compares with 107,650 resolved under the 1996 scheme in the same period from its standing start on 1 April 1996.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board were successful in each year since 1990. [57398]

Mr. Boateng: The table gives the number of cases resolved at an oral hearing and the outcome in awards made in 1990–91 to 1997–98.

Year	Number of cases heard	Number of full or reduced awards made	Percentage
1990–91	5,852	3,055	52.2
1991–92	8,909	3,981	49.2
1992–93	7,896	3,745	47.4
1993–94	7,340	4,094	55.7
1994–95	8,905	4,567	51.3
1995–96	7,350	3,976	54.1
1996–97	8,338	4,072	48.8
1997–98	7,410	3,518	47.5
Total	62,000	31,008	50.0

In addition to the total of 62,000 heard, a further 15,352 appeals cases were resolved without a hearing. Data on the number of these resulting in an award are not available without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases have been refused by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board on the grounds that the applicant did not co-operate with the Police. [57402]

Mr. Boateng: In the period 1990–91 to 1997–98, 155,833 claims were refused by the Board. Of these, 37,945 (24 per cent.) concerned failure by the applicant in reporting to, or otherwise co-operating with, the police.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will allow applicants to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to see (a) police evidence and (b) other relevant evidence in advance of any appeal hearing. [57400]

Mr. Boateng: The arrangements whereby the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board obtains information from the police are governed by an agreement between the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Home Office and the Board. These arrangements, which I have no plans to seek to change, include an undertaking by the Board not to disclose police documentary material to applicants, with the exception of witness statements, which are made available to applicants at an appeal hearing and recovered at the end of the proceedings. If other police information is at issue, the applicant is notified and the police officer will be called to give oral evidence which is open to examination and cross-examination by the applicant. All other material is sent to the applicant well in advance of the hearing. The Board members hearing the case have precisely the same documents before them as the applicant. They, too, rely solely on the oral evidence brought out at the hearing in relation to police information.

Superstores

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fires were attended by rescue services in single storey uncompartmentalised warehouse style superstores of (a) over 2,000 square metres and (b) over 4,000 square metres in (i) 1990 to 1995, (ii) 1996, (iii) 1997 and (iv) 1998 to date. [57675]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is not available centrally.

Probation Service

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform the Probation Service; and if he will make a statement. [57392]

Mr. George Howarth: Our proposals for modernising the probation services of England and Wales are set out in the consultation document "Joining Forces to Protect the Public", which was published on 6 August this year. The consultation will conclude on 27 November. Also relevant are our proposals set out in the consultation paper "Support Services in Family Proceedings—Future Organisation of Court Welfare Services", which was published on 30 July. This consultation will conclude on 13 November. Copies of both consultation documents are available in the Library. In both cases, there will be no decisions taken until all the responses have been carefully considered.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he was first informed that an international warrant for the arrest of Senator Pinochet had been issued; and who informed him. [57413]

Mr. Straw: I was told by my office during the evening of Friday 16 October.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those people who consulted him or his officials about the diplomatic status of Senator Pinochet prior to the senator's arrest. [57427]

Mr. Straw: Neither I nor my officials were consulted about Senator Pinochet's diplomatic status.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his officials were informed that Senator Pinochet had entered the United Kingdom on his current visit. [57396]

Mr. Straw: An immigration officer granted Senator Pinochet leave to enter the United Kingdom on 22 September 1998. Officials elsewhere in the Home Office were only alerted to Senator Pinochet's presence on 14 October.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Spanish authorities about the extradition of Senator Pinochet; and when. [57411]

Mr. Straw: I received no such representations.

Surveillance (Complaints)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been made about the Security Service through the Security Service tribunal relating to telephone taps, letter intercepts and close surveillance in each of the last five years; and how many of the complaints made in each of those years has been upheld. [57913]

Mr. Straw: The available information regarding complaints about the Security Service made to the Security Service Tribunal is published in the Annual Reports of the Security Service Commissioner. The numbers are as follows:

Year	Number of complaints received
1993	36
1994	42
1995	21
1996	34
1997	45

The table details the number of complaints relating to property received by the Security Service Tribunal and referred to the Commissioner in accordance with paragraph 4(1) of Schedule i to the Security Service Act 1989:

Year	Number of complaints received
1993	11
1994	19
1995	12
1996	10
1997	14

The available information regarding complaints to the Interception of Communications Tribunal is published in the Annual Reports of the Interception Commissioner. The numbers are as follows:

1993	41
1994	37
1995	64

Year	Number of complaints received
1996	52

No determination in favour of a complainant has been made by either Tribunal.

Channel Islands

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the result of the review of the financial legislation in Crown dependencies announced on 20 January, with particular reference to the Channel Islands. [57754]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 4.

Asylum Seekers

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to estimate future numbers of refugees and asylum seekers; what plans he is making for their reception; and if he will make a statement. [57684]

Kate Hoey: It is impossible to predict with any degree of accuracy what the future numbers of asylum seekers in the United Kingdom will be. The flow depends on a number of factors, reflecting conflicts, political instability and migratory pressures around the world. We are however looking at recent trends and also looking to make judgments on how the measures announced in the White Paper will affect the number of asylum applications. The results of our analysis will be available shortly.

The Government's plans to introduce a new support system for asylum seekers are set out in chapter 8 of the White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—a modern approach to immigration and asylum" (CM 4018).

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further (a) policy and (b) financial responses are being considered to deal with problems on the South Coast, arising from the influx of asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement. [58207]

Kate Hoey: Asylum seekers who register their application when they arrive in this country may be eligible for income support. In-country applicants may be eligible for support under the National Assistance Act 1948 or (in the case of children) under the terms of the Children Act 1989. In the latter case, the obligation to provide support falls on the local authority.

I am aware of the pressures being faced by a small number of local authorities in coping with the recent influx of asylum seekers. I have, therefore, encouraged the Local Government Association (LGA) and the Association of London Government (ALG) to develop a clearing house arrangement which will enable asylum seekers to be dispersed on a fair and equitable basis around the country. I am aware of the financial disincentives in the current grant arrangements by which local authorities recover part of their costs in providing a support to asylum seekers. Provided the LGA and the ALG can introduce a workable system for the support of asylum seekers, the Government propose to change the grant arrangements for this year to enable local authorities to be paid on the basis of unit costs which are realistic but challenging.

For the longer term, the Government plan to introduce a new support system for asylum seekers as set out in chapter 8 of the White Paper, "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—A Modern Approach to Immigration and Asylum" (Cm 4018).

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the steps taken by the nuclear industry to ensure that it is fully millennium-compliant. [57762]

Mr. Battle: All UK nuclear operators have initiated major programmes of work to address potential problems associated with the century date change issue. Those aspects of these programmes that address potential safety concerns are being monitored closely by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). The HSE is satisfied with the actions being taken. If the HSE were not satisfied it could make use of its extensive powers to require nuclear site licensees to undertake any safety-related actions it considered necessary. Operators anticipate that all essential work will be completed by mid-1999. Systems will be re-tested thoroughly to provide confirmation that remedial action taken to rectify any safety problems that are identified has been effective. Contingency plans will also be in place for the critical dates as a precaution against unforeseen threats to safety.

Marine Sector

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the contribution to the United Kingdom economy of the marine sector in terms of (a) its share of national value added and (b) employment. [57088]

Mr. Battle: There is no standard definition of the marine sector. Furthermore, some of the industries which might reasonably be included, such as marine equipment, are not available from official statistics, usually because they are not separately identified within the Standard Industrial Classification. However, the following information is available

Standard Industrial Classification 1992	Description	Percentage of GDP 1996	Percentage of employee Jobs[1] 1996
35.1	Building and repairing of ships and boats	0.2	0.2
61	Sea and inland water transport	0.3	0.1

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what meetings he had to discuss the aerospace industry during his recent visit to the United States. [56477]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 26 October 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry takes a close interest in the aerospace industry. His recent visit to the United States however focused on computing, information technology and new media, emerging technologies, and biotechnology and pharmaceuticals. He also discussed inward investment issues. Aerospace issues were not discussed on this occasion.

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the strategic and industrial implications of a merger between British Aerospace and DASA of Germany; and if he will make a statement. [56474]

Mr. Battle: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made clear since his statement with the German and French Heads of Government on 9 December last year, there is an urgent need to restructure the aerospace and defence industries in Europe.

It would be for companies themselves to come forward with any specific merger proposals, which would be subject to consideration by the appropriate competition authorities in the usual way.

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the scale of US Government support for the research and technology efforts of US aerospace companies; if he will take measures to match this proportionately; and if he will make a statement. [56467]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 26 October 1998]: The most recent information available from NASA indicated that its office of aeronautics had a budget of over $940 million for civil aeronautical research and technology. In addition, other US Government bodies provide significant support to the research and technology efforts of US aerospace companies. My Department examines these figures and, with our European partners, has regular discussions with the US Government about levels of such support.

No decisions have yet been made about detailed DTI budget allocations in future years.

Miners (Compensation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department has taken to ensure that trade unions are fully consulted in compensation negotiations for Scottish miners for (a) occupational respiratory diseases and (b) vibration white finger. [57577]

Mr. Battle: We have been keen at every stage to consult with all appropriate bodies and their agents, including the relevant trade unions, in negotiations relating to claims for compensation by miners throughout the United Kingdom, including Scotland, in respect of occupational respiratory diseases and vibration white finger. The solicitors acting on behalf of the National Union of Mineworkers (Scotland Area) have had regular communications from our claims handling agents, IRISC. This is in addition to the information which we understand those solicitors have received from plaintiff's organisations and Steering Groups in England and Wales who are meeting direct with my officials and IRISC on a regular basis.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department has taken to (a) supervise, (b) monitor and (c) facilitate negotiations relating to compensation for Scottish miners for (i) occupational respiratory disease and (ii) vibration white finger. [57576]

Mr. Battle: We have, following the recent test case litigation, in England and Wales, in relation to both occupational respiratory disease and vibration white finger, been closely and continuously involved with our claims handling agents, IRISC, in respect of a broad range of complex medical and legal issues arising out of the respective judgments, in relation to claims submitted on behalf of not just English and Welsh claimants but also Scottish claimants. We have instructed our Scottish solicitors to represent our interests in relation to Scottish claims. They and IRISC have been instructed to keep the National Union of Mineworkers (Scotland Area) fully informed of the progress of the negotiations in England and Wales. The intention is to secure as quickly as possible efficient handling arrangements for the prompt, consistent and fair resolution of claims submitted on behalf of all miners in Scotland, England and Wales.

Motor Industry

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people are employed in the car industry in the West Midlands. [57131]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 29 October 1998]: According to the 1996 Census of Production, some 80,000 people in the West Midlands are directly employed in the automotive industry. This figure includes those directly employed by vehicle manufactures and those in the supply chains.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the prospects for the motor industry (a) nationally and (b) in the West Midlands. [57132]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 29 October 1998]: Overall prospects for the industry remain buoyant. New car sales in 1998 are expected to total 2.2 million, the highest figure this decade. New investments announced so far this year total £1,550 million with 4,000 new jobs created in the last 6 months alone.

The recent launch of the new S-type Jaguar involves a £400 million investment in the West Midlands with 1,300 new jobs. Two other new models also launched at the Motor Show last week, and manufactured in the West Midlands, are Peugeot's new 206 model and the R75 from Rover. These new models will be key to the future of the motor industry in the region; all have been well-received.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what new measures he proposes to assist the motor car industry (a) nationally and (b) in the West Midlands. [57133]

Mr. Battle: With £1.55 billion of new investment and over 4,000 new jobs created so far this year, the car industry in the UK remains strong. It is not this Government's intention to single out any specific sector for special measures. Instead we are putting in place policies to build a stable economy capable of sustaining steady growth with particular emphasis on raising productivity and controlling inflation. This will benefit all sectors.

However, maintaining and enhancing productivity are a constant challenge for the industry. Companies have been working to put in place competitive practices and to deliver models which customers want to buy. Rover in particular is looking at these issues again in an effort which involves close and ongoing discussions between the management and workforce in the West Midlands. We will maintain a close interest in their progress.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans his Department has to change the current bidding system for gaining a non fossil fuel obligation contract; and if he will make a statement; [57977]

(2) if his Department will introduce measures to allow the payment of green electricity subsidy payments to small wind power producers outside the non fossil fuel obligation scheme; and if he will make a statement; [57978]

Mr. Battle: This Government propose to undertake a new and strong drive to develop renewable energy sources in line with their manifesto commitment. To this end, I have commissioned a review of policy including considerations of what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10 per cent. of UK electricity needs from renewables by the year 2010 and how renewables can make an effective contribution to meeting requirements for future greenhouse gas reduction commitments.

That review is considering both support mechanisms for renewable energy, such as NFFO—and including the current bidding system—and the development of the green electricity market in the UK as well as the links between Government support and market development.

My Department has also recently issued a public consultation paper on the future of gas and electricity regulation, entitled "A Fair Deal for Consumers—Modernising the Framework for Utility Regulation", which is considering a number of wider issues affecting the electricity industry, including proposals on the separate licensing of supply and distribution. My Department will be consulting on how the NFFO might be adapted to such new circumstances.

A number of companies operating in the green electricity market now developing outside the NFFO arrangements already offer a green premium to small renewable power producers generating from a number of renewable energy sources.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what measures his Department has taken since 1 May 1997 to encourage the generation of power using (a) onshore and (b) offshore wind turbines; and if he will make a statement; [57975]

(2) what plans his Department has to provide financial assistance to individuals and communities for the erecting and running of wind turbines; and if he will make a statement. [57976]

Mr. Battle: As a first step in the Government's new and strong drive for renewables, I announced the fifth and largest Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO-5) Order on 24 September 1998 of 1177 MW. This includes 36 projects, comprising 28 MW of contracted capacity from the special band for small wind turbines which is of particular interest to individuals or communities.

My current review of renewable energy is considering the contribution each renewable energy source could make, including onshore and offshore wind energy, the barriers to deployment and the measures which may be necessary to overcome them, and the need for research, development, demonstration and dissemination. I expect to make an announcement about the Review later this year.

In the meantime, my Department's New and Renewable Energy Programme continues to support a wide range of research projects related to wind energy and geared mainly towards onshore deployment, stimulated by successive Orders under the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation. The Programme has also funded a series of studies related to community involvement in and development of renewable energy schemes and has produced a useful guide entitled "Community involvement in renewable energy projects—A guide for community groups". My Department has also worked with Triodos Bank towards the successful launch of the Wind Fund.

Also in September this year, I took a major step towards generating electricity from offshore wind by launching a consultation document on arrangements for incorporating the development of offshore wind energy into the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation Order (NFFO) process. Current work on offshore wind, includes monitoring the development of the first offshore wind NFFO project, at Blythe, and assessing the commercial opportunities for UK manufacturing industry within the offshore wind arena.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what quantities of irradiated spent magnox fuel imported from Italy are currently in store at Sellafield; and what safeguards are applied to this spent fuel. [57097]

Mr. Battle: individual quantities of spent fuel stored or reprocessed at Sellafield for specific customers are a commercial matter for BNFL and their customers. All civil nuclear material in the United Kingdom is subject to Euratom and IAEA safeguards.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact on policy in the United Kingdom of the decision by the German Government on 20 October to change their policy in respect of support for nuclear fuel reprocessing. [57091]

Mr. Battle: The new German Government have so far given only the outline of their policy on nuclear issues, including reprocessing of spent fuel. The details, including the implications for British Nuclear Fuels' reprocessing contracts with the German power utilities, remain to be clarified.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements have been made with the Italian authorities for the return of reprocessing wastes from Sellafield. [57094]

Mr. Battle: Since 1976 all new contracts for reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for return of wastes. The Government intend that such options should be exercised and that wastes arising from reprocessing be returned to the country of origin. It has been the practice of successive Governments to obtain, before a contract for the reprocessing of foreign spent fuel is signed, assurances from the relevant government that it will take no legislative or regulatory steps to prevent the return of wastes arising under the contract. The adequacy of the facilities for managing those wastes is a matter for their owners and the regulatory authorities of the country concerned in accordance with the relevant legislation of that country.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what quantities of (a) low level, (b) intermediate level and (c) high level radioactive waste arising from the reprocessing of irradiated spent magnox fuel from Italy are currently stored at Sellafield; and if these wastes are covered by return-to-sender contractual obligations in the reprocessing contracts with Italy. [57096]

Mr. Battle: Each tonne of spent nuclear fuel reprocessed gives rise to approximately four cubic metres of low level waste containing 0.001 per cent. of the radioactivity, one cubic metre of intermediate level waste containing 1 per cent. of the radioactivity, and one tenth of one cubic metre of high level waste containing 1 per cent. of the radioactivity, and one tenth of one cubic metre of high level waste containing 99 per cent. of the radioactivity. Individual quantities of spent fuel stored or reprocessed at Sellafield for specific customers are a commercial matter for BNFL and its customers. Since 1976 all new contracts for reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for return of wastes. The Government intend that such options should be exercised and that wastes arising from reprocessing be returned to the country of origin.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Fair Funding

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the total numbers of responses to the consultation on "Fair Funding: improving delegation to schools"; and how many were (a) in favour of and (b) opposed to the proposals. [57081]

Ms Estelle Morris: 2,967 responses were received. Most of them contained a range of views on the different measures, although broadly speaking secondary schools favoured more delegation whilst primary schools preferred to keep LEA services. GM schools favoured the increased delegation while LEAs expressed concern. I am sending my hon. Friend a summary analysis of the responses and placing copies in the Library.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the names of those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 May 1997, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed, and whether they receive remuneration. [56744]

Mr. Mudie: The information requested is given in the table. My hon. Friend will wish to note that this information will be in the Department's Annual Report when it is published next year, and is also accessible through the Public Appointment Unit's Internet Website.

Study or Training Leave

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the estimated cost to his Department of granting a right to time off for study or training for 16 and 17 year olds. [57678]

Mr. Mudie: Full details of the estimated costs to the Government of introducing a right to time off for study or training for certain 16 and 17-year-old employees were included in the Regulatory Appraisal which was published alongside the Teaching and Higher Education Bill in November 1997. A copy of the Regulatory Appraisal was placed in the Library.

Student Guidance

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve guidance to students for transition at 18 plus. [56208]

Mr. Mudie: Careers services are required, in partnership with schools and colleges, to provide students at 18 with access to the information, advice and guidance to enable them to make informed decisions to progress into further learning or employment. We are asking careers services to focus particular attention on those young people who are most in need of help.

School Funding

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the difference is between the local authority with (a) the highest and (b) the lowest standard spending assessment for (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools. [57670]

Ms Estelle Morris: The table sets out the education standard spending assessment per primary pupil and per secondary pupil for all local education authorities in England for 1998–99. The difference between the local authority with the highest and the lowest standard spending assessment is £1,880 per primary pupil and £2,432 per secondary pupil.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to encourage co-operation and joint planning between further education colleges and neighbouring schools in respect of (a) 14 to 16 year old students and (b) 16 to 19 year old students. [57667]

Mr. Mudie: We are keen to see greater collaboration between schools and colleges. For 14 to 16 year olds we are encouraging innovative arrangements for work related learning through school-college links. We have also invited Local Education Authorities to bid under the new £500 million Social Inclusion: Pupil Support Grant for projects involving colleges to tackle truancy and exclusion from school.

For 16 to 19 year olds we are working closely with the Local Government Association, the Further Education Funding Council and other partners to promote co-operation between schools and colleges with the aim of increasing participation and achievement. We hope to make a further announcement in this area shortly.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the comparative costs of equivalent courses delivered by (a) further education colleges and (b) training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement. [57668]

Mr. Mudie: Estimates of the funding costs of achieving various qualifications in school sixth forms, FE colleges and work-based training will appear in 'The Public Funding Costs of Education and Training for 16–19 Year Olds in England 1996–97'. This report is currently being finalised in collaboration with representatives of the FE sector, training and enterprise councils and other partner organisations, and will be published shortly.

Sixth Form Numbers

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the (a) names and (b) classifications of 11 to 18 schools with 50 or fewer sixth form students, together with the local authorities in which they are located. [57574]

Ms Estelle Morris: The 1997 Secondary School Performance Tables contain the names and classifications together with the number of pupils aged 16 and over (which gives an indication of the size of a school's sixth form) of each 11 to 18 school in each LEA area in England. Copies of the tables are available in the Library.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many UK students had not been assessed for liability to pay tuition fees by 21 October. [58026]

Mr. Mudie: This information is not collected centrally. However, the Department has written to all LEAs impressing on them the need to complete these assessments quickly.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much the Government had spent on assessing the liabilities of non-UK EU university students to pay tuition fees by 21 October. [58025]

Mr. Mudie: An amount of £327,000 had been spent by 21 October.

Maintained Schools

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 19 October 1998, Official Report, column 1003–04, on the performance of maintained schools, if he will rank each local education authority in order of the cost for each (a) A level and (b) GCSE obtained. [57930]

Mr. Mudie: Information on the costs of each qualification in maintained schools is not collected.

Teacher Posts

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many new teacher posts have been created in each of the last five years in the primary phase. [55815]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The numbers of new teacher posts are not held centrally. The total full-time equivalent number of teachers in service in the maintained nursery and primary sector in England for each of the last 5 years is given in the table.

January	Full-time equivalent
1994	197,600
1995	198,400
1996	199,600
1997	200,000
1998	198,400

LEAs that received grants to reduce infant classes have reported that an additional 1,500 teachers were recruited for infant classes in September 1998 to help deliver the class size pledge.

Social Affairs Council

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Social Affairs Council meeting on 27 October. [58318]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I attended the Council of Employment and Social Affairs Ministers in Luxembourg on 27 October.

The Commission presented its draft Employment Guidelines for 1999, its draft Joint Report on member states' implementation of their National Employment Actions Plans, and the Employment Rates Report. The Council broadly welcomed the proposed Guidelines. Detailed discussion of these documents will take place at Council meetings on 20 November and 1 December. The Guidelines and Joint Report will be put to the European Council for agreement in Vienna on 11–12 December. The Council also heard a report from the Chair of the Employment and Labour Market Committee on the timetable for producing employment reports in 1999.

The Council discussed a Presidency paper setting out the remaining areas for agreement on employee involvement within the proposed European Company Statute. The Presidency hopes to secure political agreement at the meeting of the Council on 2 December.

The Council had an open debate on the Commission's Social Action Programme 1998–2000. Many delegations supported the Action Programme's emphasis on promoting employment and tackling unemployment. No conclusions were drawn.

The Council noted progress reports on the reform of the Standing Committee on Employment, the proposed Council Directive on protecting the health and safety of workers potentially at risk from explosive atmospheres, the proposed extension to students of Regulation 1408/71 (social security for migrant workers), and the negotiations for the second phase of the LEONARDO DA VINCI vocational training programme.

The Council also noted the Commission's intention to proceed with a draft Council Directive on information and consultation of workers at national level, and noted Presidency reports on the informal meeting of Women's and Social Affairs Ministers in Innsbruck in July and the recent symposium in Vienna on "A Society for All Ages".

Physical Education

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many physical education teachers were employed by local education authorities and grant-maintained schools in each year since 1979. [55783]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Full-time teachers in maintained secondary schools in England who were both teaching and had a post A-level qualification in physical education were as follows:

England

Year	Number of teachers
1983–84	22,000
1987–88	18,000
1991–92	17,000
1996–97	15,000

Secondary schools staffing surveys since 1979

Similar information for primary teachers is not available. However, primary teachers are trained to deliver the whole primary curriculum including physical education.

Teacher Training

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to allow OFSTED to accredit initial teaching training courses either in whole or in part. [56213]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There are no plans to change the current statutory requirements which give the Teacher Training Agency (TTA) alone the power to accredit or de-accredit providers of initial teacher training. OFSTED will continue to be responsible for inspection of all initial training and TTA will continue to use information from inspections in making decisions about continued accreditation.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many post-graduate certificate in education courses in individual institutions of higher education failed to recruit sufficient numbers and therefore did not proceed in each of the last six years. [56199]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on individual post-graduate certificate in education courses which did not proceed because of lack of recruits is not held centrally.

Teaching Standards

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what evaluation he has made of the standards of teaching achieved by those who have completed (a) a three year undergraduate degree, followed by a one year PGCE course and (b) a four year B.Ed or BA with qualified teacher status. [56150]

Mr. Charles Clarke: To gain Qualified Teacher Status candidates on any form of initial training must achieve the same standards and have demonstrated a secure knowledge of the appropriate curricula. The Department has not undertaken any evaluation of the teaching of teachers trained through different routes. We expect the same high standard of all new teachers.

College Staff

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if it is his policy to allow college staff to remain as clerks to governing bodies. [56700]

Mr. Mudie: We shall consider the position of clerks in the forthcoming revision of college instrument and articles of government.

Education Maintenance Allowances

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to announce a decision on the Government's proposals for education maintenance allowances for 16 to 19-year-olds. [56699]

Mr. Mudie: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his July Public Expenditure White Paper, we will be setting up pilots to test the effect of an Education Maintenance Allowance payable to young people from low-income households. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to make further announcements on this matter before the end of the year.

Citizenship Curriculum

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the new citizenship curriculum requirements for schools will incorporate specific reference to the United Nations. [57087]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The recommendations of the Citizenship Advisory Group include a set of learning outcomes which refer to the work of the United Nations organisations and major non-governmental bodies. These recommendations are currently being considered by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority as part of their review of the National Curriculum. Following this review, the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority will offer advice to the Secretary of State on the place of education for citizenship in the curriculum.

National Grid for Learning

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will assess the advantages of extending the National Grid for Learning Scheme to youth and community services for use in youth clubs. [57456]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government's consultation paper 'Connecting the Learning Society' set out a target date of 2002 for the connection of all schools, colleges, universities and libraries and as many community centres as possible to be connected to the National Grid for Learning via the Internet.

The Government will be seeking to ensure that the National Grid for Learning, the University for Industry and other lifelong learning initiatives will be accessible via a range of technologies including the Internet, and at a range of locations which fit in with people's lifestyles. We will consider a range of ways in which to maximise access to the Grid, including community projects such as youth clubs.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he intends to extend free telephone calls to after 6 p.m. under the National Grid for Learning. [57457]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government intend to review current arrangements brokered by Oftel with the telecommunications industry, to build on the progress already made in making medium speed connections more affordable to schools. Further announcements will be made shortly.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools in the Chorley constituency have taken advantage of the National Grid for Learning to date. [57455]

Mr. Charles Clarke: 16 schools in the Chorley constituency have so far benefited under the first year of the Standards Fund National Grid for Learning Grant. These grants are intended to progressively enable all schools to secure access to high quality networked educational services on the National Grid for Learning through the replacement of obsolete equipment, the provision of suitable internal and external networking facilities, quality software and on-line services, and associated training in basic ICT use.

All schools which currently have access to the Internet will be able to take advantage of resources and services through the National Grid for Learning.

Attention Deficit Disorder

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to issue guidance to local education authorities on education provision for children suffering from attention deficit disorder. [57605]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Education Act 1996 and the Department's Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs advise local education authorities and schools on how to identify and provide for all children with special education needs. We have no plans to issue further guidance specifically about children suffering from attention deficit disorder.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) and Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals for special educational needs; [57681]

(2) when his special educational needs action plan will be published; and if he will make a statement. [57682]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Consultation on the Green Paper Excellence for all children: meeting special educational needs generated many thoughtful ideas and comments. In the light of these, and advice from the National Advisory Group on Special Educational Needs, we will be publishing an Action Programme shortly.

Autism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to instruct local education authorities to provide him with information on the provision made by that authority of special educational facilities for children who suffer from autism or other forms of early childhood psychosis; and if he will make a statement. [57048]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Provisions in the Education Act 1981, now consolidated into the Education Act 1996, require schools to submit information on numbers of pupils with special educational needs. In accordance with the recommendation of the Warnock Committee there is no requirement for them to record the nature of the disability or learning difficulty and we have no current intention to require them to do so.

Youth Employment

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much had been spent from public funds on the new deal for 18 to 24 year-olds by 30 September. [56045]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 26 October 1998]: Expenditure brought to account on the new deal programme for 18–24 year olds by 30 September was £100.9m. Of this £43.6 million has been spent on preparation, implementation and marketing, the remaining £57.3 million is operational programme costs.

Individual Learning Accounts

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure that every Careers Service contractor is required and resourced to provide guidance to all holders of individual learning accounts and to adults in every local community as part of a locally determined local learning access network to nationally defined quality standards. [56207]

Mr. Mudie: We are considering our future strategy relating to local information, advice and guidance services for adults in the light of the many helpful comments on the issue we have received in response to "The Learning Age" (Cmnd 3790).

HEALTH

Health Visitors

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of health visitors in each of the next four years. [56176]

Mr. Milburn: Estimates of numbers of health visitors to be employed are not drawn up centrally. Workforce planning and the commissioning of training places for health visitors is employer led; local workforce plans are drawn up by education consortia which comprise trusts, health authorities and other healthcare providers.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what meetings his Department has had with (a) members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, (b) members of the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens, (c) the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, (d) the Environment Agency and (e) the Health and Safety Executive, following the finding of abnormal prion protein in the appendix of a patient in Torbay; and if he will make a statement; [57151]

(2) what recommendations have been made to his Department by (a) the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee and (b) the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens following the finding of abnormal prion protein in the appendix of a patient in Torbay; what steps he has taken to implement the recommendations in each case; and if he will make a statement; [57152]

(3) what discussions he has had with (a) SEAC, (b) ACDP, (c) HSE, (d) MAFF and (e) the Environment Agency on the destruction of surgical instruments in the context of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease in the context of any further findings over new variant CJD; [56994]

(4) what checks have been made of patients subsequently operated upon in hospitals where individuals infected with new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease have undergone operations; [56996]

(5) what research his Department has commissioned following the finding of abnormal prion protein in the appendix of a patient in Torbay; [57021]

(6) what assessment his Department has made of the risk to patients of contracting new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease from surgical instruments; and if he will make a statement; [56947]

(7) what contingency plans his Department has made should he be advised that there is a risk that patients could be infected with new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease by surgical instruments; [57005]

(8) what action has been taken following the finding of abnormal prion protein in the appendix of a patient in Torbay; what meetings it has held with other bodies on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [57004]

Ms Jowell: In early July we learnt that abnormal prion protein had been found in the appendix removed from a patient in Torbay who, although he did not show any symptoms of disease at the time, some 2½ years later died of nvCJD.

The matter was immediately referred to the joint Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens/ Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee Working Group (ACDP/SEAC WG) on Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies which considered it at a meeting on 8 July. The advice of this group, as stated by the then Chief Medical Officer in his Press Release of 27 August 1998, is that the overall risk of transmission of nvCJD to other patients is minimal.

On 21 September SEAC considered the implications of this incident for the risks from surgical instruments and a summary of their discussion was made available to a sub-group of the ACDP/SEAC WG specially convened to look at decontamination advice on 24 September. Following the sub-group meeting on 24 September discussions are underway with the HSE, the Medical Devices Agency, and a number of independent experts about changes to instrument design and decontamination procedures aimed at reducing any remaining risk still further. Proposals for further work are also being finalised and these groups will consider their final advice once these discussions are completed.

The existing guidance from ACDP/SEAC "Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy Agents: safe working and the prevention of infection" (published in March 1998) aims to minimise the risk to patients and staff from nvCJD and already specified that all instruments used on known or suspect cases of CJD must be destroyed as must those used on procedures involving the brain, spinal cord or eyes of patients thought to be at risk of CJD, for instance recipients of human growth hormone. This guidance also specifies that disposable instruments should be used whenever reasonably practicable for other procedures on at risk patients.

We are considering with the CJD Surveillance Unit in the light of expert advice what follow up studies should be undertaken in respect of patients who had operations in hospitals where nvCJD patients had undergone surgery before they showed any sign of this disease.

The Department, MAFF, the Environment Agency and the Health and Safety Executive have jointly issued a call for further research into the inactivation of TSEs. The call closed on 23 October. The thirteen outline proposals received are now being considered and an announcement will be made as soon as possible about those that will be pursued further.

The aim of all this work is to ensure that any risk of transmission of nvCJD through surgical procedures is reduced as far as it is possible to do so. We shall review the procedures currently in force as more information becomes available about the characteristics of the disease, and about the effects of changes in decontamination procedures or in instrument design, and will take further action if that seems necessary.

As announced on 27 August by the previous Chief Medical Officer the Department, in conjunction with the Medical Research Council, was already considering anonymised pilot surveys to assess whether the abnormal prion protein associated with the disease might be in appendixes and tonsils removed during routine surgery. The proposals received are now the subject of expert scientific review and we expect to make a decision on funding shortly.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if his Department records the (a) hospital admissions, (b) operations and (c) dates of any operations undergone by individuals who have been diagnosed with new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease; and if he will take steps to make public such information; [56995]

(2) if his Department records the names of those individuals who have been diagnosed with new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease. [57002]

Ms Jowell: No. The Department does not hold clinical information on individual patients with new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (nvCJD). Personal information of this nature is confidential to the patient, their family, and the clinicians responsible for their care and is not made public. Clinical information is held by the CJD Surveillance Unit (CJDSU) which advises clinicians on the care and treatment of patients. The CJDSU is bound by the same requirements for confidentiality as other clinicians and passes information to the Department only in an anonymous and aggregated form.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease have been recorded in the UK. [56992]

Ms Jowell: Since new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (nvCJD) appeared in late 1995 there have been 30 definite and probable cases. All of these patients have died.

Statistical information about Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease is published by the Department on a monthly basis. The latest table was published on 2 November.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish the evidence his Department has evaluated on the effectiveness of routine autoclave sterilisation in the destruction of prion proteins; [56993]

(2) at what temperature his Department has been advised that prion proteins are destroyed. [56946]

Ms Jowell: The unconventional agents that cause Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies (TSEs) are extraordinarily resistant to physical and chemical treatments that destroy even the most resistant bacteria, spores, fungi and viruses. The current advice on inactivation and decontamination is contained in the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens/ Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committees' guidance on "Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy Agents: Safe working and the prevention of infection" which was published in March 1998. Copies have been placed in the Library. Additionally, since publication, the guidance has been available on the Stationery Office website (www.official-documents.co.uk/documents/doh/spongifm.contents.htm). It contains information on the effectiveness of routine autoclaving in the destruction of the agents of TSEs. The guidance is based upon the best available scientific data on inactivation. It does not itself provide evidence of the temperature required to ensure complete inactivation of prion proteins. The two Committees are keeping this subject under review as part of their continuing work in this field and on 12 September 1998 the Department, jointly with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Environment Agency and the Health and Safety Executive, issued a call for further research into the inactivation of TSEs. The call closed on 23 October 1998. The thirteen outline proposals that were received are now being considered and a further announcement will be made as soon as possible about those that will be pursued further.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the full findings of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee's research. [57022]

Ms Jowell: The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) does not fund or carry out research. If it considers that new or further research is needed it makes recommendations to that effect. Any recommendations on research would be included in the public summary published after each SEAC meeting.

Recommendations for research are considered by the relevant department and other funders such as the Medical Research Council (MRC) and the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council (BBSRC) and by the Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy (TSE) Funders Co-ordination Group and the TSE Research Advisory Group.

A "Strategy for Research and Development Relating to the Human health Aspects of Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies" was published in November 1996 and has been available in the Library since December 1996. In July 1998 a comparable "Strategy for Research and Development Relating to the Animal Aspects of TSEs" was published and placed in the Library.

These strategies are kept under review and calls for research proposals issued as necessary by the appropriate funding bodies. The findings of individual research projects are published in peer-review scientific journals as they become available.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans his Department has to inform those patients found to be infected with new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease as a result of screening; and if he will make a statement; [56997]

(2) what plans his Department has to screen tissue specimens for signs of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease; and if he will make a statement; [56998]

(3) what plans his Department has to screen individuals for signs of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease; and if he will make a statement. [56999]

Ms Jowell: The report of the detection of the agent associated with new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (nvCJD) in the appendix of a patient who was not showing any clinical symptoms of the disease when the tissue was removed but who died of nvCJD two and a half years later, was published on 27 August. On the same day the former Chief Medical Officer announced that the Department, in conjunction with the Medical Research Council, was discussing with the relevant scientists proposals for anonymised pilot surveys to assess whether the abnormal prion protein associated with the disease might be in appendices and tonsils removed during routine surgery. The proposals received following these discussions are now the subject of expert scientific peer review, and we expect to make a final decision on funding shortly.

These studies are designed to improve understanding of the epidemiology of nvCJD. It must be emphasised that they are research studies on pathological specimens and are not diagnostic screening tests. The research proposals will be governed by ethical committee approval, as is normal, to safeguard patient interests.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the full findings of the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens research. [57023]

Ms Jowell: The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens is an independent committee which advises Government, but which does not undertake or commission research in its own right. However, if the Committee considers that research is needed it can make recommendations to Government to that effect. These recommendations would be considered in the context of the Department's overall research strategy.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's current estimate of the number of cases of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease likely to be diagnosed in (a) 1999 and (b) 2000. [56945]

Ms Jowell: No reliable estimates can yet be made about the future numbers of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease cases. To make reliable estimates of the future number of cases we need to have more information about the incubation period, the level of exposure to the agent that can cause the Disease, the route of infection and the role of genetic susceptibility. The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee sub-group which advises the Chief Medical Officer on the epidemiology of the disease considers that it is likely to be at least three to four years before we are in a position to make a reliable estimate.

Social Services White Paper

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the proposed White Paper for Social Services. [57395]

Mr. Hutton: The Government intend to publish their Social Services White Paper in the near future.

Ante-natal Appointments

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each health authority in England and Wales, the number of ante-natal appointments routinely offered to first-time mothers. [57468]

Mr. Hutton: Information is not collected in the form requested. Information about the number of antenatal outpatient attendances by trust has recently been published in "Outpatient and Ward Attenders England 1997–98", copies of which have been placed in the Library; trust figures for community contacts will be published shortly in "Community Maternity Services: Summary information for 1997–98, England".

Disabled Access

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to NHS trusts on providing suitable facilities for disabled patients and visitors; and if he will make a statement. [57119]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The National Health Service Executive issued Health Service Circular (HSC1998/156) on 17 September 1998 entitled Implementing Section 21 of the Disability Discrimination Act. This circular informs the NHS about the implementation of the Act and sets out the action the NHS Executive plans to take to support implementation of Section 21 of the Act in the NHS.

Work is currently in progress to produce a good practice guide. This will cover both employment and service provision issues relating to disabled people for the whole of the NHS and will therefore cover general practitioner practices and other primary care providers.

Organisational Stress

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the percentage of NHS trusts which undertake organisational stress audits; and what plans he has to issue guidance to trusts on the introduction of such audits. [57120]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 29 October 1998]: Information is not collected centrally on the percentage of trusts which undertake organisational stress audits. The National Health Service Executive has issued guidance to all NHS trusts and health authorities on managing organisational stress through its health at work in the NHS project and is piloting work based on this guidance at four trusts.

Attention Deficit Disorder

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to encourage the establishment of a national representative group for parents of children suffering from attention deficit disorder. [57604]

Mr. Hutton: The proposal has been discussed with the Department and we are currently considering a bid for central grant aid to help develop a national alliance of local support groups in this field. We expect to announce decisions on voluntary sector grant applications for 1999–2000 under the Section 64 general scheme around mid-February 1999.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase payments to local authorities in London which have to meet the cost of accommodating asylum seekers and their children. [57897]

Mr. Hutton: We have set out our plans to change the cumbersome immigration and asylum process we inherited from the previous Government in the White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—A Modern Approach to Immigration and Asylum". We are considering how to improve the support grants for local authorities in the transitional period, and will announce the terms of the grants later this year.

Primary Care Group

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the reasons for his decision not to allow local authorities to nominate an elected member to the primary care groups in their administrative area. [57780]

Mr. Milburn: Local Authority officials may serve on a Primary Care Group Board as lay representatives of that community.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, when carrying out duties as a member of the primary care group, nominees of the Social Services Department will be required to act in the best interests of the PCG or their employer. [57778]

Mr. Milburn: Members of the Primary Care Group board will act in the best interest of the population they serve.

Care Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the non-back dating of local authority payments for care move placements once they have completed the assessment if the resident's assets have fallen below the capital threshold. [57784]

Mr. Hutton: There have been representations from the hon. Members for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) and, for Lewes (Mr. Baker) and from my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Kidney) and the voluntary organisation Help the Aged concerning backdating of local authority payments for home care placements once the assessment has been completed.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those care services and establishments that are not covered by a regulation and inspection regime (a) currently and (b) under proposals made by his Department. [57779]

Mr. Hutton: There are several gaps and anomalies in the current regulatory system for care services. In particular, residential care homes and nursing homes run by organisations established by Royal Charter or Act of Parliament, domiciliary and day care services, small children's homes, and other arrangements involving children living away from home are not covered by statutory regulation. In addition, local authority care homes, whilst required to be inspected by social services departments, are not subject to registration arrangements.

The Government are committed to reforming regulatory arrangements in this sector. Our proposals will be set out in a White Paper on Social Services which we intend to publish shortly.

Joint Procedures (NHS and Personal Social Services)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what flexibility he will allow to social services committees which can demonstrate that there are more appropriate targets for their locality to achieve the standards and objectives set out in Joint Guidance, Quality Projects and Social Services Inspectorate reports than the targets provided in those documents. [57786]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are committed to the reform and modernisation of the public services. We have set out new objectives for children's social services as part of the "Quality Protects" initiative. The forthcoming Social Services White Paper will set out the wider agenda for social services including new objectives for adult social services. "Modernising Health and Social Care" the National Priorities Guidance for 1999/2000–2001/2002 sets objectives and targets in support of this new agenda. Achieving these objectives will be a first step towards the modernisation of social services and we expect all local social services authorities to play their part. Progress on the achievement of these objectives will be kept under review by the Regional Offices of the Social Services Inspectorate.

Local social services authorities will be free to develop additional targets to supplement those in the National Priorities Guidance and demonstrate their success in taking forward the new agenda.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce legislation to put into effect the recommendations contained in Lord Justice Otton's report on medical negligence. [57717]

Mr. Milburn: None. Officials are still in the process of identifying ways in which suggestions received as the result of the Secretary of State's call for ideas on reducing litigation in the NHS can best be taken forward. Lord Justice Otton's proposals will be considered as part of this exercise.

Drugs Bill

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans has he to reduce the NHS bill for drugs (a) prescribed by general practitioners and (b) used in hospitals. [56916]

Mr. Milburn: The Government have no plans to reduce the National Health Service bill for drugs prescribed by general practitioners or hospitals. Primary Care Groups (PCGs) and health authorities (HAs) will commission and fund local health services from their unified budget allocations in line with the agreed local Health Improvement Plan, local priorities and national guidelines. HAs and their PCGs will be expected to ensure the cost-effective and efficient use of all NHS resources, including any funding for drugs.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to reply to the letters dated 9 July, 13 August and 25 September about the Private Finance Initiative from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton. [58121]

Mr. Dobson: I replied to my right hon. Friend today.

Asthma

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the advantages of use in the NHS of the Buteyko breathing method for the treatment of asthma; and if he will make a statement. [58265]

Mr. Hutton: The prevention and treatment of asthma are high priority topics within the Department's research programmes. We do not currently have any plans to carry out a trial of the Buteyko method. If a research proposal on it of sufficiently high scientific quality were submitted, in response to any future open calls for research in this area from the Departmental or National Health Service research and development programmes, such a proposal would be considered alongside all other competing bids.

A key agency through which the Government support bio-medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, an independent body which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology. The Council is not funding any research on the Buteyko method at present but it is always willing to consider for support soundly based new scientific proposals, in competition with other applications.

Waiting Lists

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of guidance on the compilation of NHS waiting lists issued by (a) his Department and (b) NHS regional executives since 1 May 1997. [58023]

Mr. Milburn: No new guidance on the compilation of National Health Service waiting lists has been issued by the Department, including the regional offices of the National Health Service Executive since 1 May 1997. Health authorities and trusts were notified of the Department's plan to collect waiting list statistics on a monthly basis through HSC1998/152, copies of which are available in the Library.

Guidance is set out in the NHS Executive's Data Manual (published in January 1997), the "National Health Service Waiting Times Good Practice Guide" and "Guidelines for Good Administrative Practice" (both published in January 1996), copies of which are available in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Nolle Prosequi

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions he has intervened in a prosecution under the nolle prosequi rule in the last 12 months. [56340]

The Attorney-General: In the last 12 months I have acceded to requests for the entry of a nolle prosequi on 4 occasions.

Glidewell Report

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Attorney-General what progress has been made on implementing the recommendations of the Glidewell report; and if he will make a statement. [57887]

The Attorney-General: The Glidewell Report recommended the appointment of a Chief Executive for the Crown Prosecution Service. That recommendation was accepted on publication of the Report (1 June 1998) when I announced the appointment of Mr. Mark Addison to the post. His top priority has been to take forward the work necessary to facilitate expeditious decisions on recommendations internal to the CPS. Those recommendations which also affect other criminal justice agencies are the subject of consideration within existing or specially established inter-Departmental groups as appropriate. The work is being carried forward under the auspices of the Strategic Planning Group which the Home

Secretary, I and the Lord Chancellor established earlier this year to co-ordinate planning within the criminal justice system. A very great deal of work has been undertaken since the Report was published. I anticipate making an announcement shortly detailing the progress that has been made and how the Report will be taken forward.

Former Secretary of State for Wales

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Attorney-General if HM Treasury Solicitor acted on behalf of the former Secretary of State for Wales at any time after his resignation. [57957]

The Attorney-General: No.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Israel

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by European Commission officials in their technical talks with Israel on the problems identified in the communication on EC/Israel trade and regional cumulation of origin whose recommendations were adopted at the General Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 29 June. [57080]

Ms Quin: Following the conclusions of the 29 June General Affairs Council, European Commission officials have been pursuing the issues identified in the Communication in technical talks with Israel. A team of Commission officials visited Israel and the Occupied Territories on 14–20 September for a fact-finding mission. The Commission and Member States are now reflecting on follow-up to this mission.

Mrs. Lozidou

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the decision made by the Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg regarding the case of Mrs. Lozidou v. Turkey. [57475]

Ms Quin: We are mindful of the obligation of all parties to the European Convention on Human Rights under Article 53 of the Convention to abide by European Court of Human Rights judgments. In the case of Mrs. Lozidou v. Turkey, and in line with Council of Europe procedure, the UK, along with other members of the Council of Europe's Committee of Ministers, has invited Turkey to inform the Committee of the measures it proposes to take in consequence of the judgment.

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of the number of (a) Greek and (b) Turkish fighter planes based in Cyprus; [57591]

(2) what representations he has made concerning the stationing of foreign fighter planes in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [57593]

Ms Quin: We are not aware that any Greek or Turkish fighter planes are permanently based in Cyprus. But recent deployments of fighter planes in Cyprus by both Greece and Turkey have shown how easily tension can be raised. In line with UNSCR 1178 of 29 June we continue to urge all parties to refrain from any action which would exacerbate tensions on the island.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's role as a guarantor power for the Republic of Cyprus. [57592]

Ms Quin: The UK's role as a party to the 1960 Cyprus Treaty of Guarantee is, along with Greece and Turkey, to recognise and guarantee the independence, territorial integrity and security of the Republic of Cyprus.

We are committed to using the UK's position as a Guarantor Power to assist the people of Cyprus to achieve a political settlement in Cyprus.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs over what period the EU has made funds of 12 mecu available to support progress towards a political settlement in Cyprus; how many applications have been made by organisations representing both main communities and for what purposes; and how the results of such grants are monitored and assessed. [57960]

Ms Quin: The fourth Financial Protocol on financial and technical assistance between the European Community and the Republic of Cyprus originally covered the period from 1 January 1995 to 31 December 1998. This period has now been extended to 31 December 1999. Under this Protocol the EU set aside 12 mecu in grants for potential initiatives agreed jointly in Cyprus to promote a general settlement of the Cyprus question. So far 111,370 ecu has been committed to activities of the Cyprus All Island Trade Union Forum, although no money has actually been spent. Responsibility for monitoring funds spent under the fourth Financial Protocol lies with the Commission office in Nicosia. The Community and Cyprus will at least once during the period of implementation of the Protocol make an assessment of the implementation of the programme as a whole.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will define the projects which can apply for grants from the five mecu allocated by the EU for bi-communal projects in Cyprus; over what period such funds are available; how many applications have so far been made; and by what process aided projects are monitored and assessed. [57961]

Ms Quin: The fourth Protocol on financial and technical assistance between the European Community and the Republic of Cyprus states that 5 mecu shall be for projects to promote the development of the whole island. These funds were initially made available from 1 January 1995 to 31 December 1998. That period has now been extended for a period of one year to 31 December 1999. Three applications for funds have been approved (although to date no funds have been disbursed). These are:

0.9 mecu for cleaning a river which crosses south-north in Nicosia;

1.3 mecu to restore Hala Sultan Teke, an Islamic shrine near Larnaca;

1.5 mecu support for the Institute for Neurology and Genetics, a clinic and research centre.

Responsibility for monitoring expenditure under the Protocol lies with the Commission office in Cyprus. The Protocol specifies that the Community and Cyprus will at least once during the period make an assessment of the implementation of the programme of funding as a whole.

Gibraltar

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current proposals tabled by Spain for the future sovereignty of Gibraltar and his response to them. [57857]

Ms Quin: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), 26 October 1998, Official Report, columns 85–87.

[57649]

Mr. Fatchett: I shall write to the hon. Members with full information as soon as possible. I shall place copies of the letters in the Library of the House.

Ngawang Choephel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to secure the release from prison in Shigatse of Ngawang Choephel. [57709]

Mr. Fatchett: Ngawang Choephel appears on a list of individual cases of concern which my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary have raised with Chinese leaders. Through our bilateral human rights dialogue with China we have sought information about Choephel's case and his health. We will continue to raise his case.

Abductions

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases of alleged abduction of British citizens abroad have been dealt with by the special unit at the FCO since 1996; and if he will list the cases by (a) country and (b) the gender of the British citizens involved. [57933]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Since the beginning of 1996, the FCO-led Coordination Group has dealt with 13 kidnap cases, involving 23 British citizens.

Country	Gender
India (Kashmir)	2 male
Indonesia	2 male, 2 female
Cambodia	1 male
Russia (Chechnya)	1 male
Tajikistan	1 male

Yemen	2 male, 1 female

D. R. Congo	1 male
Russia (Chechnya)	3 male

Falkland Islands

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances the Government have received from President Menem that he will if necessary use his veto in respect of fisheries legislation affecting the Falkland Islands currently before the Argentine parliament. [58249]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Argentina has no competence to authorise fishing in Falklands waters. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made our position clear to President Menem during his recent visit. Separately my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary reinforced this message with the Argentine Foreign Minister.

Uganda

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to halt the killing of civilians in Northern Uganda. [58257]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are appalled at the reports of atrocities committed by the Lords Resistance Army (LRA) in northern Uganda. With our partners at the UN we have strongly condemned LRA tactics; most recently at this year's session of the UN Commission on Human Rights in May. We believe there cannot be a purely military solution to the problems of northern Uganda. Both my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have urged President Museveni to pursue all opportunities for dialogue as a means of resolving the conflict. We welcome recent reports for a possible Government Amnesty for rebels who give up the armed struggle as a first step towards a negotiated settlement.

Immigration Application

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the total receipts generated by application fees for visas, applications for permanent settlement and other immigration applications and (b) the total cost of entry clearance operations for each year for which the figures are known since 1993; and if he will set out the basis on which the costs are calculated identifying the individual elements. [57758]

Mr. Fatchett: The total receipts generated by application fees for visas and total cost of entry clearance operations from 1993–97 are as follows:

£ million

Year	Visitor receipts	Settlement receipts	Total receipts	Total costs
1993–94	28.0	2.5	30.5	45.0
1994–95	28.9	3.4	32.3	45.5
1995–96	37.1	5.0	42.2	46.6
1996–97	50.3	6.7	57.0	60.2
1997–98	53.8	9.7	63.5	64.5

Receipts are based on Full Cost recovery, broken down into the following categories:

a) Staffing Costs: (UK staff salaries and allowances, local staff salaries, benefits and other payments, local travel and other travel)

b) Accommodation Costs: (rents, including notional rents, furniture, maintenance, utilities and capital charges)

c) Office Expenditure: (stationery, telephones and postage, transport costs and overheads)

d) Overheads: (cots allocated from support functions at post, e.g. Management Sections and cost of MVD and support functions in London, e.g. Personnel Command and Resources Command).

Blood Products (Canadian Ban)

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Canadian Government following the banning of British blood products; and if he will make a statement. [56991]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

The Canadian Government have not banned British blood products.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the occasions since 1 May 1997 on which a Minister in his Department has used (a) an aircraft belonging to the RAF and (b) a privately chartered aircraft together with (i) details of the take-off and destination points, (ii) ground waiting time, (iii) dates of departure and return, (iv) purpose of the trip, (v) cost of the trip to his Department and (vi) details of people accompanying the Minister, indicating the total costs of all such travel borne by his Department (1) since 1 May 1997 and (2) between 1 May 1996 and 1 May 1997. [55558]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 19 October 1998]: There are no occasions on which a Minister in this Department has used an aircraft belonging to the RAF or a privately chartered aircraft.

Pensioners

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the effect of an age addition to the basic state pension of (a) £5 for those aged 80 or over, (b) £3 for those aged 75 to 79 years and (c) both of the above on (i) expenditure on non means-tested benefits, (ii) expenditure on means-tested benefits and (iii) revenues from income tax, if such measures were to be introduced once the increases in pensioner benefits planned for April 1999 have been implemented. [55641]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 19 October 1998]: The information requested is in the table.

Full year expenditure and revenue effects of age additions in 1999–2000

£ million

	(a) £5 age addition for over 80s	(b) £3 age addition for 75–79s	(c) £5 age addition plus £3 age addition
Expenditure on Retirement Pension	590	320	920
Means-tested benefit offsets	–220	–90	–310
Income tax offsets	–40	–20	–60

Notes:

1. Estimates for Retirement Pension have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department.
2. Estimates for income tax revenues have been provided by Inland Revenue.
3. Means-tested benefit offsets have been estimated using the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey uprated to 1999–2000 prices and benefits levels.
4. Estimates are in 1999–2000 prices and benefit rates, and are rounded to the nearest £10 million.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 31 July 1998, Official Report, column 741, if he will provide a breakdown of how many of the pensioners who are disqualified because of excess capital from receiving the proposed minimum income guarantee but who have incomes below income support levels, have weekly incomes in the bands of (a) up to £9.99, (b) £10 to £19.99, (c) £20 to £29.99, (d) £30 to £39.99, (e) £40 to £49.99, (f) £50 to £59.99, (g) £60 to £69.99, (h) £70 to 79.99 and (i) £80 or above. [55658]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 19 October 1998]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Income	Pensioner benefit units with income less than Income Support applicable amount
Up to and including £69.99	130,000
£70 and over	100,000
Total	230,000

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey and are almost certainly subject to a degree of error; the true figures could be higher or lower than those given. Estimates have been rounded to the nearest 10,000 cases.
2. The requested breakdown of incomes was not possible due to small sample sizes.
3. Income is defined as income assessable in an Income Support claim plus income from investments.
4. A pensioner, for income support purposes, is a single person aged 60 or over, or a couple (married or living as married) where at least one of them is aged 60 of over.

Mortgage Interest Rates

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the mechanism by which income support is increased to offset increases in mortgage interest rates. [56572]

Angela Eagle: The standard rate used to calculate payments of Income Support mortgage interest is based on the weighted average of the main Building Societies' variable rates of interest. This has been the case since its introduction by the previous administration in October 1995. The average is calculated and published monthly by the Office for National Statistics in Financial Statistics table 7.1L. Changes in the standard rate, whether up or down, are triggered by a 0.25 per cent. or more move in the published figure.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about mortgage interest rate capping for those receiving social security payments for interest on mortgages; and for what reasons the Government propose to pay arrears that may have arisen. [56573]

Angela Eagle: A standard rate of interest is used in the calculation of mortgage interest included in Income Support and income-based Jobseeker's Allowance. This was introduced by the previous Administration in October 1995. Help is available towards interest on loans taken out to purchase the home or for certain essential repairs and improvements to it. We have no plans to change this arrangement.

Lone Parent New Deal

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce a compulsory element of attendance within the Lone Parent New Deal; what exemptions there will be; and if he will list the criteria for those exemptions. [57404]

Angela Eagle: Participation in the New Deal for Lone Parents is voluntary. There is no requirement for lone parents either to attend a New Deal for Lone Parents interview or to look for work. From 26 October 1998, the New Deal for Lone Parents has been extended to all lone parents on Income Support, including those whose claim was established before April 1998.

The Government are committed to providing viable choices for lone parents who, in the past, were written off to a life on benefit and the New Deal for Lone Parents is a major step in achieving this objective. This approach is in tune with what lone parents want: the opportunity to work, and a better quality of life for their children.

From 2000, the Government plan to implement new legislation to make it a condition of receiving benefit that, when asked to do so, people take part in an interview to talk about their prospects of finding work. This requirement will initially be implemented in 12 pilot areas and will be introduced in ways that take account of individual circumstances.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of those who have entered into the New Deal for lone parents are currently receiving housing benefit. [57405]

Angela Eagle: The information requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of those who have entered the New Deal for lone parents are still receiving income support. [57406]

Angela Eagle: The Government are committed to helping lone parents overcome the barriers to work through the New Deal for Lone Parents programme, which is available to all lone parents on Income Support with school age children. The programme provides a tailor-made service with support and advice on training needs, jobsearch, better-off calculations and local childcare services.

Information on the number of lone parents who have participated in the programme and moved into employment but, because of the number of hours they work, are still in receipt of Income Support is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what the timetable will be for replacing the Benefit Integrity Project as proposed in Cm 4103; [57934]

(2) when the Benefit Integrity Project will cease its operations under his proposals contained in Cm 4103; [57936]

(3) if he will issue instructions that all BIP interviews, scheduled but not yet undertaken, are cancelled from the date of his statement in Cm 4103. [57935]

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give the date when he expects the new test to replace the Benefit Integrity Project; [58211]

(2) if he will estimate the savings which will result from the new test which will replace the Benefit Integrity Project. [58213]

Mr. Timms: In his statement of 28 October 1998, Official Report, columns 339–42, and the exchanges which followed discussing the next phase of the Government's plans to reform the welfare state, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made it clear that we will introduce a modern, active approach to Disability Living Allowance which puts greater emphasis on getting claims right first time and which allows for regular reviews of claims in payment. He also emphasised that there would be no return to the situation that existed before April 1997, when nothing was being done to check that people were getting the right benefit.

The Benefit Integrity Project will continue until it is replaced by a new system which we will ensure is fair as well as sensitive. The characteristics of the new system and when and how it will be introduced will be the subject of future discussions with the Disability Benefits Forum. Once the way forward is determined estimates will be made of the likely costs and savings that may arise from the new system. We are keen to introduce this change as soon as possible but it is most important that we get it right.

All-work Test

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the replacement for the all-work test to come into operation. [58212]

Mr. Timms: We aim to introduce reforms to the test alongside national roll-out of the New Deal for Disabled People personal adviser service, which is being considered for April 2000. Different approaches are likely to be trailled before then as part of the development of the enhanced test.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultation documents he proposes to publish on the test he intends to use to replace the all-work test. [58129]

Mr. Timms: In our consultation document "A new contract for welfare: Support for Disabled People", we set out our plans to reform the All-Work Test so that it provides positive information about what people can do, as well as assessing what they cannot do. We have no plans to change the way in which the test determines entitlement to benefit. "Support for Disabled People" makes clear our intention to work with disability organisations and to consult them as we take forward work on the enhancements to be made to the test. We do not envisage a further formal consultation document on these changes.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people currently drawing benefit who will move into work as a result of the new test which will replace the all-work test for each of the first five years after the introduction of the new test. [58125]

Mr. Timms: The All-Work Test will continue as now to assess the level of an individual's incapacity, to determine entitlement to incapacity benefits. The intention in reforming the test is to ensure that it also produces positive information about the person's functional capacities. This information will feed into a wider assessment of employability by a personal adviser, who will help people with long term illness and disability to plan a return to work. No assumptions have been made about the numbers who will leave incapacity benefits as a result of these initiatives.

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers of individuals currently living in households claiming one or more means-tested benefit and the estimated figures for (a) five and (b) 10 years hence. [58135]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of beneficiaries of one or more means-tested benefit totalled 14,490,000, as at May 1997.

Notes:

1. Means tested benefits are Income Support, Income Based Jobseeker's Allowance, Family Credit, Disability Working Allowance, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.
2. Beneficiaries are defined as the claimant, their partner and any dependants.
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten thousand.
4. Overlap between benefits have been taken into account.
5. Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit figures exclude cases where there is no entitlement because of non-dependant deductions.
6. Council Tax Benefit cases do not include second adult rebate cases.
7. Sample sizes:

   Income Support: 5 per cent.

   Family Credit: 5 per cent.

   Disability Working Allowance: 100 per cent.

   Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit: 1 per cent.

Sources:

2. Jobseeker's Allowance Statistics Quarterly Enquiry, May 1997.

4. Disability Working Allowance 100 per cent. count of claims.
5. Housing Benefit Management Information System, annual 1 per cent. sample enquiries without Income Support taken at the end of May 1997.

"Support for Disabled People"

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the increase in the take-up of the disability working allowance as a result of the changes announced in "Support for Disabled People". [58123]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available.

Disability Working Allowance will be replaced by the Disabled Person's Tax Credit before the introduction of the changes announced in "Support for Disabled People".

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his estimate of the increase in the numbers claiming means-tested benefits, as a result of the changes by benefit set out in "Support for Disabled People" for each of the first five years after implementation. [58127]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the format requested.

We do not expect any significant increase in the total numbers making a new claim for means-tested benefits as a result of the changes set out in the consultation document "Support for Disabled People".

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost arising from an increased take-up of those services referred to in paragraph 17 of "Support for Disabled People". [58131]

Mr. Timms: Additional resources will be made available to meet the cost of possible increased take-up of training and other services in the single gateway pilots. Detailed work on costs is still being undertaken. An important reason for piloting the single gateway is to measure any additional take-up of services and the associated costs in order to inform decisions about national implementation.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people under 20 claiming the severe disablement allowance will also be (a) eligible and (b) claiming income support after he has introduced the changes set out in Support for Disabled People. [58126]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the form requested.

It is estimated that, after the introduction of the proposed changes set out in the Consultation Paper "Support for Disabled People", there will be approximately 8,000 new claims for Incapacity Benefit a year from people under the age of 20 who are disabled from birth or early in life or long term sick and who cannot work. In the first year of their claim, Income Support will provide a higher rate of benefit and at any one time about 6,000 are likely to receive it. After a year, they will receive a higher rate of Incapacity Benefit of (£78.30 at April 1998 rates) which, in most cases, will remove the need for Income Support.

Those young people aged 16 to 19 who are on Severe Disablement Allowance at the point of change will also be transferred to the new higher rate of benefit after one year. It is estimated that approximately 14,000 of that group will receive Income Support prior to transfer.

Gateway to Work

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the penalties for those who do not turn up for interviews as proposed in the Gateway to Work. [58124]

Angela Eagle: It will be a condition of benefit that individuals of working age not in full-time work attend an interview in order to discuss the help that is available to them. It is not unreasonable to expect clients who seek state support to attend an interview with a personal adviser to discuss their options, and to make it a condition of benefit that they should do so.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the additional costs in staff time which will be required to initiate the personal adviser scheme detailed in the Gateway to Work. [58130]

Angela Eagle: Additional resources will be made available to fund the provision of personal advisers for all benefit claimants of working age in the single gateway pilot areas. Detailed work on costs is still being undertaken. An important reason for piloting the single gateway is to measure costs in order to inform decisions about national implementation.

Disabled People (Income Support)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the incapacity benefit recipients who will cease claiming as a result of the changes set out in support for disabled people will (a) begin and (b) continue to draw income support. [58128]

Mr. Timms: No existing recipient will cease to receive Incapacity Benefit or Incapacity Benefit paid with Income Support as a result of the changes to the contribution conditions and treatment of occupational and personal pension income proposed in our Consultation Paper "A New Contract for Welfare: Support for Disabled People".

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to begin monitoring the most cost-effective ways of keeping in contact with people on incapacity benefit; and when he expects to be able to report on these experiments. [58132]

Mr. Timms: Currently, contact with people receiving Incapacity Benefit is limited to occasional checks on their level of incapacity. We believe the current system too often consigns people to a life on benefit and we want to maintain closer contact with them throughout their claim. In this way, we can ensure we are up to date about their circumstances, and provide them with advice; for example about the help available with return to work and about the benefits to which they may be entitled. We will try out different methods of contacting people and consider how best to develop the methods which seem most helpful and successful. We consider this to be no more than good practice and do not plan a formal report on it.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if those individuals drawing private health insurance which has been individually arranged may continue to draw incapacity benefit under the current rules. [58134]

Mr. Timms: As our Consultation Paper "A New Contract for Welfare: Support for Disabled People" made clear we propose, on future claims to Incapacity Benefit, to take some account of payments from permanent health insurance arranged by employers, as well as occupational and personal pensions. We have no plans to take account of permanent health insurance or other forms of health insurance where this is arranged by the individual.

Widows (SERPS)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average amount of SERPS paid to widows at present; and what is the expected average payment to a widow whose husband dies (a) on 5 April 2000 and (b) on 6 April 2000. [58262]

Angela Eagle: The average amount of SERPS paid to widows under pension age at 31 March 1998 was £15.30.

The estimated average payment to a widow whose husband dies on 5 April 2000 is £33. For a widow whose husband dies on 6 April 2000, the average is £12. This is because of changes in the calculation of SERPS introduced by the Social Security Act 1986, including the 50 per cent. reduction in entitlement for widows.

Notes:

1. Figures for March 1998 are based on net additional pension for all widows' benefit recipients and are for Great Britain and overseas.
2. Estimates for April 2000 averages are over the total number of widows in the population and are rounded to the nearest pound.

Sources:

1. A 5 per cent. sample of the Pensions Strategy Computer System.
2. April 2000 estimates: Government Actuary's Department.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures have been taken to publicise the halving of SERPS for widowers and widows whose spouse dies on or after 6 April 2000; and when his Department's (a) leaflets and (b) other literature first referred to this change. [58263]

Mr. Denham: The Department arranged publicity about the Pensions Act 1995 with an advertising and direct mailing campaign in the Autumn of that year.

Information on the halving of the Additional Pension from the State Earnings-Related Pension Scheme (SERPS) featured in leaflet PEC3, "The 1995 Pensions Act", which was part of this campaign and available to the public until August 1997.

The Benefits Agency supported this campaign in Spring 1996 by issuing leaflet EQP 201, "Changes To Your Future", to answer simple inquiries about changes arising from the Pensions Act 1995. More detailed information featured in leaflets NP46, "A Guide To Retirement", and NP45, "A Guide To Widows' Benefit", from Spring 1996 and remains there to date. Where appropriate, other more general publicity and information on pensions and widows' benefit also refers customers to these more detailed leaflets.

The Benefits Agency leaflets always advise customers to check with their local Social Security office if they require more detail or up-to-date information about individual cases.

Budget Savings

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the categories of current recipients from whom benefits will be withdrawn or reduced in order to make the savings in the social security budget specified in his oral statement of 28 October 1998, Official Report, columns 339–42, indicating the aggregate and average amounts of reduction that will apply in each category. [58024]

Mr. Timms: At the point of change, no current recipient will lose benefit as a result of changes to entitlement rules from the reforms we are making.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the typical period between a person becoming a lone parent and that person first contacting the Child Support Agency. [57077]

Angela Eagle: It is difficult to make generalisations in this area. There is evidence to suggest that many lone parents who claim Income Support do so soon after separation or the birth of a child. However, applications for child maintenance are received from parents with care who may or may not be claiming benefits and who may or may not have recently become lone parents. Under arrangements introduced from April this year lone parents claiming Income Support are helped to complete a maintenance application form when visited by Benefits Agency staff at the start of the claim. Similarly awards of Family Credit or Disability Working Allowance will prompt the issue of child support forms. Lone parents not on benefit are free to contact the Child Support Agency at any time.

WALES

Council House Sales

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money will be allocated to (a) Wales and (b) Denbighshire in the Government's distribution of funds released from money raised from the sale of council houses in the last year and each of the next four years. [56408]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: £33.38m is available to Wales under the Capital Receipts Initiative in the current financial year (including the revenue consequences of the higher borrowing). Of this £708,000 has been allocated to Denbighshire.

My right hon. Friend is currently consulting on spending plans for Welsh Office programmes for the next three financial years and on changes to the local authority housing capital distribution arrangements. He will announce his decisions later in the year.

Steel Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the steel industry in Wales, with particular reference to steel dumping into the UK from Asian producers and to energy costs. [57451]

Mr. Hain: The steel industry, like other parts of the manufacturing sector in Wales, is being affected by the international economic situation, but is continuing to take steps to reduce its cost base to ensure it remains profitable. Allegations of dumping and energy costs are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mental Health

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve mental health provision. [57442]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My plans will be influenced by two complementary Welsh Office projects whose findings will shortly be available to me. The first address the future direction of adult mental health services in Wales. And the second assesses the effectiveness of the present Mental Health Strategy. These reports will help inform the development of services in Wales.

Departmental officials also remain in close touch with the Department of Health on work being carried out on the National Strategic Framework on Mental Health in England.

Community Pharmacists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy concerning community pharmacists in North East Wales. [57445]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Government recognise the contribution made by community pharmacists to the health of the people of Wales. We will seek to maintain an appropriate level of service. The Welsh Office has funded 18 projects under "Delivering Care, Meeting Need"—6 in North Wales—for developing the range of services that can be provided by pharmacists in the community.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the impact of the opening of pharmacies in supermarkets upon community pharmacies; and if he will make a statement. [57446]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The number of community pharmacies in Wales rose slightly from 702 in 1989 to 712 at 31 March 1998. Although the numbers do fluctuate, changes of ownership over this period appear to have had very little effect on the overall numbers of establishments.

Aerospace and Steel Industries

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the benefits of the current assisted area status for the aerospace and steel industries in Alyn and Deeside; and if he will make a statement. [57448]

Mr. Hain: Since the new Assisted Areas came into force in 1993 aerospace firms in Alyn and Deeside have accepted offers of RSA grants totalling £1,055,000 which are expected to create 122 new jobs and to safeguard 63 jobs. Steel production is subject to special state aid restrictions, and is not eligible for aid under Assisted Areas.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what involvement he has in the restructuring of the aerospace industry; and if he will make a statement. [57449]

Mr. Hain: The restructuring of the aerospace industry is a matter for the industry itself. I take a keen interest in its future and have met a number of aerospace companies in Wales. The Department also has regular meetings with the South Wales aerospace companies to discuss issues that affect the industry.

Welsh-medium Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (i) nursery, (ii) infant, (iii) primary and (iv) secondary Welsh-medium schools there are; and if he will make a statement. [57439]

Mr. Hain: No information is available centrally about the medium of instruction at maintained nursery schools. At January 1998, there were 445 primary schools where most pupils were in classes where Welsh was the sole or main medium of instruction. Of these schools, 8 were infant schools and 3 juniors. 50 secondary schools were Welsh speaking schools as defined in Section 354(8) of the Education Act 1996.

Cataract Operations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress he is making in tackling waiting lists for cataract operations for elderly persons in the Wrexham Maelor Hospital Trust area; and if he will make a statement. [57444]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The number of people waiting for ophthalmic surgery at Wrexham Maelor NHS Trust, which is largely cataract operations, has fallen from 1,496 in June 1998 to 1,307 in September 1998, a drop of 13 per cent.

North Wales Health Authority has agreed with the Trust that, by the year 2000, all patients requiring cataract surgery will be treated within 3 months.

Assisted Area Status

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure the retention of assisted area status for Alyn and Deeside; and if he will make a statement. [57447]

Mr. Hain: The review of the Assisted Areas will be carried out for Great Britain as a whole. All parts of Great Britain will be assessed for inclusion against common criteria.

Welsh Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met leaders of the (i) CBI and (ii) TUC to discuss the competitiveness of Welsh industry; and if he will make a statement. [57450]

Mr. Hain: I regularly meet representatives of the CBI to discuss all aspects of Welsh industry and I attended their recent conference in Birmingham. The last time I met the TUC was when I addressed their annual conference earlier this year.

Eco-village, Pembrokeshire National Park

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of the eco-village in the Pembrokeshire National Park on the environment; and if he will make a statement on the implications for sustainable development of this project. [57393]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: In the first instance this is a local planning authority issue. Pembrokeshire Coast National Park Authority has resolved to take enforcement action in relation to this matter. In view of the Secretary of State's planning responsibilities I can make no further comment.

Gwent Tertiary College

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the current financial situation at Gwent Tertiary College; and how many members of staff are to be made compulsorily redundant. [57901]

Mr. Hain: Gwent Tertiary College's provisional financial statements for the year ended 31 July 1998 record an operating cost deficit of £946,000 and an historic cost surplus of £157,000 with a turnover of £34 million. The forecast for the current year is an operating cost deficit of £961,000 and an historic cost surplus of £243,000 with a turnover of £31.1 million. The College has no plans to make members of staff compulsorily redundant.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact which the current situation at Gwent Tertiary College has had on the quality of education provided for full-time and part-time students. [57902]

Mr. Hain: The Further Education Funding Council for Wales is responsible for assessing the quality of education provided by Gwent Tertiary College. During the Council's first assessment cycle (1993–1997) provision in 14 programme areas was at or above the quality threshold. Areas assessed as below the quality threshold—Catering, Construction, General Education, Hairdressing and Beauty Therapy, and Independent Living Skills—are scheduled for reassessment in the current cycle. All the areas assessed in the current cycle thus far—Business and Management, Computing, Secretarial Studies and Office Technology, Art and Design, and Performing Arts—have been awarded grades at or above the quality threshold.

CABINET OFFICE

Anti-drugs Education

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proportion of the recently announced moneys to tackle illegal drug mis-use will be used for anti-drugs education. [56856]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I announced on 1 September a total of £217 million additional funding to tackle illegal drug misuse. Of this total, £3 million is specifically for drugs education and prevention activities. From 1999–2000, a total of £19 million per annum will support the development of effective drug education and prevention programmes across the country.

Autism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will introduce a charter for persons with autism in line with the charter adopted at the fourth Autism Europe Congress in May 1992; and if he will make a statement. [57056]

Mr. Kilfoyle: We have no plans to introduce a specific charter for people with autism or any other disability. I am, however, determined that public services should be accessible to all, and that all users should be treated fairly, paying particular attention to those with special needs. That is why we have launched Service First—the new Charter programme. The new programme is underpinned by nine guiding principles that all public services should be striving to achieve. These include principles covering the accessibility of public services and fairness.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to exercise his power under section 16(2)(j) of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 (as amended by the Pesticides Act 1998) to make regulations for the provision of information relating to pesticides to be made available to the public. [57711]

Mr. Rooker: I am anxious to ensure that the public gains the greatest possible access to information on pesticides, taking advantage of the broader powers provided by the Pesticides Act 1998. My officials have just completed a public consultation exercise to explore how this objective might best be pursued. Full details of the consultation are available in the Library of the House. Following consideration of the responses received, Regulations will be drafted and further public consultation will take place. The draft Regulations will also be notified to the EC under the Technical Standards Directive. Subject to the outcome of these consultations, the Regulations will be put in place as rapidly as possible but at this stage it is not possible to give a precise date.

Agriculture

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the present state of British agriculture; and if he will make a statement. [57664]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 November 1998]: We have received a large number of representations from a range of sectors currently experiencing difficulties. We are listening to the concerns made in numerous meetings and in correspondence.

Farm Borrowing

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is (a) the total level of borrowing of British farmers and (b) the average level of borrowing per farm in the United Kingdom. [57504]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 November 1998]: Information on the liabilities of UK agriculture is published in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom". The estimate of total liabilities at December 1996 was £9 billion. This represents about £69,000 per full time holding compared to average assets per holding of £570,000. Lending by banks to agriculture and fishing has, according to the Bank of England, increased by about 12 per cent. between the fourth quarter of 1996 and the second quarter of 1998.

Agricultural Land Sales

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the acreage and value of land sold by farmers for non-agricultural purposes for each of the last 10 years expressed (a) in current prices and (b) as a percentage of total land sales by farmers. [57502]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 November 1998]: I regret that the information requested is not available. Information on sales of agricultural land does not distinguish between land used for agriculture and for other purposes. The official statistics on agricultural land sales include an analysis by type of purchaser (e.g. to individuals or various categories of corporate purchaser) but specifically exclude sales of agricultural land for development and non-agricultural purposes. The area of agricultural land on agricultural holdings is recorded in the annual June agricultural census. This area is shown to have declined by 429 thousand hectares (2.4%) in the UK since 1988 but there is no reliable information on the new use of this land.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of overall farm income in 1998 and 1999. [57661]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 November 1998]: The 1998 forecast of Total Income from Farming will be published on 1 December. I will ensure that the hon. Member receives a copy of the Statistical News Release on that day.

Forecasts for the 1999 calendar year will not be published until December 1999.

Policy Proposals (Quality of Life)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what methods of measurements, and from what base lines, his Department employs in assessing the quality of life implications of policy proposals; and how these were selected. [55766]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 November 1998]: My Department uses a range of measures to assess policy proposals consistent with relevant guidance from HM Treasury and other Government departments. Assessments of risks, costs and benefits to businesses, the citizen and the environment are made, as appropriate, for each regulatory proposal. Policies such as that for the agri-environment schemes assess applications for environmental benefits. My Department is also developing a set of indicators to measure sustainable agriculture which include measuring its role in the rural economy.

Fatal Accidents (Farms)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fatal accidents there were on farms in England and Wales during 1997. [57433]

Mr. Morley: Between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998, the Health and Safety Executive recorded 45 fatal accidents in farming, forestry and horticulture in England and Wales.

Cattle Welfare

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the 1994 Welfare of

Livestock Regulations with a view to the provision of a continuous supply of fresh drinking water being made available to cattle. [57192]

Mr. Morley: Schedule 4 to the Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1994 requires livestock, including cattle, to be provided with an adequate supply of fresh drinking water each day. These Regulations will shortly be reviewed, in their entirety, as part of the process of implementing Council Directive 98/58/EC concerning the protection of animals kept for farming purposes.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what approvals for what herbicides will be necessary for the planting of those herbicide-tolerant genetically modified seeds which will be planted, pursuant to the agreement between the Government and industry; when he expects such approvals to be in place; and what proposals for public participation in decisions relating to such approvals he intends to make. [57713]

Mr. Rooker: No herbicide may be used unless Ministers have given approval for that use. The use of a herbicide on a crop genetically engineered to be resistant to that herbicide would be considered a new use requiring a new approval.

The timing of the issue of any approval will depend upon the date of application and the complexity of the evaluation required. Evaluations are carried out by the Pesticides Safety Directorate in line with its published targets.

The results of such scientific evaluations will be considered by the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides, which now contains two lay members, and will be passed to Ministers for decision. These decisions will be informed by a review of the environmental implications of herbicide use on genetically modified crops which I have commissioned from the Pesticides Safety Directorate. Arrangements are being made for monitoring the use of herbicides on genetically modified crops and for an ecological study of the first farm-scale plantings of such crops. All pesticide approvals will be announced publicly.

Environmentally Sensitive Area Scheme

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the payments made under the Environmentally Sensitive Area scheme to farmers where the farmer is not the landowner. [57303]

Mr. Morley: The Ministry has a contractual obligation to review payments under the ESA scheme every two years. Reviews are based on an assessment of the costs incurred by agreement holders in complying with the terms of the agreements, and any necessary incentive, in accordance with relevant EU legislation.

The total costs of complying with an agreement should be independent of the tenure status of the agreement holder or holders. The Ministry considers at each review whether the payment rates are adequate to attract sufficient applicants to the scheme to meet the targets set.

New Forest

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement about the number of broadleaf trees currently being felled in the New Forest; [56501]

(2) what measures he will take to restore the Iron Age village near Fritham damaged by Forestry Commission contractors; and what measures he will put in place to prevent a recurrence. [56503]

Mr. Morley: The subjects of these questions relate to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise and I have asked the Chief Executive to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Letter from Bob McIntosh to Mr. Desmond Swayne, dated November 1998:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your questions about the number of broadleaf trees being felled in the New Forest and the measures being taken to restore the Iron Age village near Fritham.

I am pleased to be able to advise you that there is no clear felling of broadleaved trees in the New Forest. The only felling which is conducted involves silvicultural thinning, and the Forestry Commission proposes to remove some 500 cubic metres of hardwood logs during the coming winter, together with 200 cubic metres of cordwood and 4,000 cubic metres of pulpwood.

With regard to the restoration of the Iron Age village, staff from the Forestry Commission met the contractor who caused the damage, together with officials from English Heritage and English Nature in August, to agree restoration measures. These measures chiefly consisted of minor levelling works, but these cannot take place until conditions on the ground are drier, as the site is currently waterlogged.

I would like to re-assure you that new procedures have been put in place to reduce the likelihood of recurrence. These include:

- revised operational planning procedures
- increased staff levels on planning
- a tightening of contract controls
- a continuing review of unscheduled sites by the Hampshire Field Club, at two yearly intervals

I hope that this is helpful.

Ponies (Transport)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to prevent the Minimum Values Order being circumvented by exporters transporting ponies to Scotland and then to Ireland and from there shipping them to France and Belgium. [55588]

Mr. Morley: A licence is not required to export ponies from Great Britain to Northern Ireland. However, horse and pony sales, in particular sales of native breeds, are monitored to ensure rigorous enforcement of the rules governing animal welfare in transit. Checks are also carried out at ports. This activity should act as a deterrent to the development of any trade of the kind described and is a proportionate response to the suspicions that have been voiced.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Cinemas

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of films made in (a) the United Kingdom by United Kingdom-owned and managed film production companies and (b) in Europe by European-owned and managed film production companies were shown in commercial cinema complexes in England other than London in 1997. [57290]

Janet Anderson: My Department does not compile information of this type. However, the Government published a review of film policy "A Bigger Picture" in March this year. The report recommended a number of measures to improve the performance of British films in all parts of the UK and is currently being implemented.

Fire Precautions

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to ensure that sprinklers are fitted as a fire precaution in historic buildings of national importance. [57185]

Mr. Alan Howarth: In line with the recommendations of Sir Alan Bailey's report "Fire Protection Measures for the Royal Palaces", an Historic Buildings Fire Research Co-ordinating Committee has been established, with a membership including my Department and major owners of historic properties, in order to gather and disseminate information on the full range of fire protection measures for historic buildings, including sprinklers. Decisions on whether or not they should be installed in any specific case need to be made as a part of each building's risk assessment.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had this year with (a) Railtrack plc, (b) the train operating companies and (c) other interested parties concerning the delays in establishing services between the West Coast Main Line Railway and mainland Europe for (i) Eurostar passengers and (ii) piggy-back freight journeys. [57287]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has continuing discussions with London and Continental Railways (LCR) and the Consortium which is responsible for regional Eurostar services. The Government and LCR have also received proposals from the Virgin Group. The consortium selected to operate Eurostar have been asked to review urgently the feasibility of regional services and report by the end of this year.

Railtrack has for some time been considering an upgrade of the West Coast Main Line to accommodate "piggy-back" rail freight. Ministers meet regularly with representatives of Railtrack to discuss various issues connected with the rail network. The proposed piggy-back project would be likely to require substantial Government grant and Railtrack has had lengthy discussions with Departmental officials about the project.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which bodies in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) abroad, have been consulted as part of the departmental project on high level nuclear waste and spent fuel disposal strategy; and what is the total expected cost of the project. [57101]

Mr. Meale: The High Level Waste and Spent Fuel Disposal Research Project is due to end in Spring 1999. The aim of this two year study is to identify the research strategy that would be required in order to pursue disposal of high level waste and spent fuel. Its results will be used to inform the development of policy on radioactive waste management and will be subject to full public consultation. An interim report has been reviewed by the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee.

The Department is assisted in its management of the project by a Management Board where the following bodies are represented:

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions
Nuclear Electric Limited
Scottish Nuclear Limited
Magnox Electric Plc
British Electric Fuels Plc
UKAEA
Ministry of Defence
Environment Agency
Scottish Environment Protection Agency
Health and Safety Executive
Department of Trade and Industry
Scottish Office
Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee
The Royal Society
United Kingdom Nirex Limited (on a co-opted basis).

Relevant bodies in a number of countries with programmes on high level waste and spent fuel disposal have been contacted from time to time on particular issues.

The initial contract for the project was advertised in the Official Journal of the EC on 28 July 1995. The total maximum liability for the work is £432,731.00 (including VAT).

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what involvement the United Kingdom has in the EC programme on concerted action on retrievability of deposited radioactive waste. [57183]

Mr. Meale: United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. (Nirex) is participating, along with its counterparts from seven other EU countries, in the European Commission Concerted Action on the Retrievability of Long Lived Radioactive Waste Disposed in Deep Underground Repositories. Nirex is providing technical expertise to support the objective of the project

"to establish a clear interpretation and working definition of the concept of retrievability".

Stansted and Gatwick Airports

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans exist to review the passenger capacities of Stansted and Gatwick Airports. [57421]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the White Paper "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone", the Government undertook to develop a new national airports policy. Reviewing airport capacity in the south east will be a key part of that.

An order under section 32 of the Airports Act 1986 currently limits the annual number of passenger air transport movements at Stansted to 120,000. An application was made by BAA plc to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 8 October for the limit to be increased to 185,000. I understand that BAA plc has also applied to Uttlesford District Council for detailed planning permission for capacity expansion. If both applications were successful, BAA plc estimate that this would enable them to increase passenger throughput from the current 5.47 million a year to 15 million.

Passenger air transport movements are not limited by order at Gatwick, although the Government do impose restrictions on night time movements. In the short term, while the new national airports policy is developed, any expansion of capacity at Gatwick would be something for BAA plc to propose.

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the actual level of passenger movement at (a) Stansted and (b) Gatwick Airports in 1997. [57420]

Ms Glenda Jackson: According to figures collected by the Civil Aviation Authority, Stansted handled 5,426,859 terminal and transit passengers in 1997 (being an 11.6 per cent. growth over 1996 levels), and Gatwick handled 26,959,015 (being a 10.8 per cent. growth).

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the passenger capacity at (a) Stansted and (b) Gatwick Airports in (i) 1997 and (ii) 1998. [57419]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Passenger air transport movements at Stansted are capped by an order under section 32 of the Airports Act 1986. Since 1996, the ceiling has been 120,000 movements a year. On present assumptions about aircraft size and occupancy levels at Stansted, that equates to something in the vicinity of 8 million passengers.

No such order exists in respect of Gatwick. Gatwick Airport Ltd's Airport Development Strategy anticipates that terminal capacity limitations would, on the basis of existing infrastructure, constrain passenger throughput at around 35 million passengers per year.

Aircraft Noise (Heathrow)

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 3 July 1997, Official Report, column 256, on aircraft noise, what steps have been taken to monitor aircraft noise levels on incoming flights to Heathrow Airport; and what progress has been made in reviewing noise limits on those flights. [57422]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Aircraft Noise Monitoring Advisory Committee (ANMAC), which advises the DETR on aircraft noise and monitoring at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted, is investigating the feasibility of setting noise limits for arriving aircraft; and of other possible means of ameliorating arrivals noise. ANMAC has established a working group, which is presently conducting a study of the causes of variability of noise levels.

A study of the effect of changed air traffic control procedures for Heathrow arrivals from the east in the early morning is in its final stages.

Daytime noise contours for summer 1996 at Heathrow have recently been published.

Travel Concessions (Pensioners)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to equalise travel concessions for male and female pensioners. [57467]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Pensions Action 1995 already provides for women's eligibility for state pensions and concessionary fares to be raised from 60 to 65 over a transitional period from 2010 to 2020, thus equalising the qualifying age for men and women. There are no plans to change these dates. The link between pensionable age and eligibility for concessionary travel will be maintained throughout.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if an application is pending before the European Court of Justice on equalising the age at which pensioners may be entitled to travel concessions. [57693]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I know of none. The matter has already been tested in the European Court of Justice, which ruled that the present concessionary fares arrangements were outside the scope of Directive 79/7/EEC, which provides for the progressive implementation of equal treatment of men and women in matters of social security.

Housing Associations

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those housing associations which have exceeded the Housing Corporation's rent target in 1997–98, showing in each case the (a) average rent levels, (b) percentage above target, (c) overhead costs as a percentage of total costs and (d) chief executive's emoluments. [57463]

Mr. Raynsford: The Housing Corporation's requirement that year-on-year rent increases by registered social landlords (RSLs) should not exceed RPI+1% only came into effect from 1 April 1998.

The Corporation has recently published an initial analysis of data on rent increases during 1997–98, before the requirement became effective. This showed that overall RSL rent increases in 1997–98 were within the new RPI+1% limit. However, data from a total of 138 RSLs showed increases above this level which are now being investigated by the Housing Corporation.

The Corporation will be publishing final results from its analysis of 1997–98 rent data by the end of December. The tables to be published will show both rent increases and rent levels in 1997–98 by named RSLs with over 250 homes. Copies will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Modern Local Government White Paper

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the evidence referred to in paragraph 3.5 of the White Paper, Modern Local Government, that councillors wish to spend more time in direct contact with those they represent. [57465]

Mr. Raynsford: The study by Ken Young and Nirmala Rao—"Coming to Terms with Change?—The Local Government Councillor in 1993" (published by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation and LGC Communications in 1994), which was followed up by Audit Commission work—"Representing the People—The Role of Councillors" (Audit Commission Publications 1997)—provide the evidence referred to in paragraph 3.5.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the Jubilee Line extension to be operational. [57606]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport, following advice from Bechtel (the international company appointed to oversee the run up to line opening) now plan to open the Jubilee Line Extension in three phases, beginning at the eastern end of the line. The first stage will be Stratford to North Greenwich, in late spring 1999. The second stage (late summer 1999) will see opening through to Waterloo. The final stage (late autumn 1999) will be total line opening, including linking with the existing Jubilee Line.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give the current construction cost estimate for the Jubilee Line extension; and what was the estimate a year ago. [57466]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport review Jubilee Line Extension cost estimates regularly. The latest estimate of final cost is £2.85 billion. At this time last year it was £2.76 billion.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what scientific evidence he took into account in agreeing with the industry to permit farm-scale planting of herbicide-tolerant genetically modified seeds. [57424]

Mr. Meacher: All the Herbicide Tolerant Genetically Modified crops to be included in the farm-scale plantings will be covered by a consent issued under Directive 90/220. Such Consents are granted only after consideration of an assessment of the risks to human health and the environment based on best current scientific evidence and the advice of ACRE and the statutory conservation agencies, including English Nature. The advice from ACRE and the evidence on which that advice is based are held on DETR's public register.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the applications for the marketing of genetically modified oilseed rape which are currently being reviewed at the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology; what is the scope and purpose of the review; if he will publish the result of the review at the same time as it is made available to the Advisory Committee on Releases into the Environment; and what consultation will be undertaken before the Committee makes its recommendations. [57423]

Mr. Meacher: The Institute of Terrestrial Ecology (ITE) have been commissioned by the Department to review the applications by Plant Genetic Systems for consent to market their hybrid system oilseed rape in the European Community ref. C/GB/94/M1/1 and C/F/95/05–01 A and B. The scope and purpose is to review the information provided by Plant Genetic Systems when the dossiers were considered by member states in 1994–96 and any relevant new information available since then, which may affect the assessment of the risk to human health and the environment, and then present the review to ACRE. ACRE will then give further advice to the Secretary of State undertaking consultation as they think fit before making their recommendation. The review will be published as soon as possible.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what seeds will be permitted to be planted under the recent agreement between industry and the Government concerning the planting of genetically modified herbicide-tolerant seeds; what regulatory consents currently apply to such seeds; if the seeds which will be planted thereunder, or the seeds derived from such planting, will be sold or otherwise marketed; if the seeds which will be planted thereunder will be authorised for such planting under Part II or Part III of the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 or otherwise; what companies will be authorised to plant the seeds and over what period of time; where the seeds will be planted; if public participation will be allowed in the monitoring; and who will carry out that monitoring. [57452]

Mr. Meacher: We have reached agreement in principle with the plant breeding industry for a programme of managed development of herbicide tolerant crops whereby the first farm-scale plantings are strictly limited and monitored for ecological effects alongside comparable plantings of conventional crops. We have yet to reach final agreement on the seeds that will be planted, but in the first instance, we expect to include Plant Genetic Systems genetically modified hybrid system oilseed rape which has approval for seed production under a consent issued by the UK in 1996, and is currently awaiting a consent to be issued by the French Government (Member States voted in favour of the product in December 1996) to extend its use to food and animal feed.

Any sowings in the programme of managed development will be carried out either (a) under Part II of the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 where the material has not yet been issued marketing approval by one of the EU Member States under Directive 90/220 and the purpose of the trials is to collect information in support of such an application or (b) under part III of the same regulations where the product has already been granted marketing approval.

The seeds derived from such plants in the managed development programme may be sold if they are covered by Part III approval and also satisfy all other regulatory requirements. The details of the farm-scale plantings and associated monitoring have yet to be agreed. The monitoring results will be made public.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provisions he has sought to have included in the SCIMAC code of practice to give the public the opportunity to assess compliance with the code's provisions. [57750]

Mr. Meacher: The draft SCIMAC code of practice and guidelines for growing herbicide tolerant genetically modified crops has provisions for ensuring compliance through a formalised programme of crop inspection. This process will be subject to random independent audit and review. I shall be encouraging SCIMAC to publish the results of these audits.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the applications for licences for genetically modified insect-resistant crops which were pending at the time of his recent announcement of a moratorium, indicating in each case the proposed terms relating to the date of marketing. [57910]

Mr. Meacher: The plant breeding industry has made a commitment that no insect resistant GM crops will be introduced into the UK for the next three years.

Applications to market crops genetically modified for insect resistance are described in the table. In all cases insect resistance has been conferred by the introduction of a Bt gene. The current position of each application in the regulatory process is given in the 'date of consent' column.

Summary of applications to market genetically modified insect-resistant crops

Date submitted	Competent authority	Notifier	Reference	GM crop	Scope of application	Date of consent
31 March 1995	France	Ciba-Geigy	C/F/4/11-3	maize	Use in agriculture in EC and importation of grain into the EC	5 February 1997

12 June 1996	France	Monsanto Europe	C/F/12/02	maize	Production of maize in the EC and import, storage and processing for use in feed, food and industrial products	Commission adopted decision 22 April 1998. Consent believed to be issued, but not confirmed

23 June 1998	Netherlands	Dekalb Genetics Corporation	C/NL/97/17	maize	The same purposes as non-GM maize varieties	Vote not yet taken by Commission

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the Government's decision to permit the farm-scale planting of herbicide tolerant crops will be affected by the results of the review of applications for the marketing of genetically modified oilseed rape. [57749]

Mr. Meacher: The review relates to the application by Plant Genetic Systems for consent to market their hybrid system oilseed rape which is also herbicide tolerant. We will have to await the findings of the review to determine whether it will affect the farm-scale planting programme.

Private Hire Vehicles

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the regulations requiring local authorities to ensure that vehicles licensed for private hire are distinguished in their markings from those licensed as Hackney carriages. [57603]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have no plans to carry out such a review. The legislation already prohibits the use of signs on private hire vehicles which might suggest that they are hackney carriages. Otherwise, it allows local licensing authorities discretion in deciding which marking to permit, or require, on private hire vehicles and hackney carriages.

Pilots

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to enable United Kingdom-licensed professional pilots to overfly France after the age of 60 years. [58107]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It is the responsibility of individual States to set the age limits of commercial pilots operating in their airspace, subject to relevant international standards.

The current standard set by the International Civil Aviation Organisation is that contracting States should not permit pilots aged 60 or over to act as pilots in charge of international commercial flights and recommends that they should not be permitted to act as co-pilots. However, States may vary this standard so long as they formally notify the difference to ICAO; other States may then decide whether or not to allow operators operating to the different standard to overfly their airspace.

Member States of the Joint Aviation Authorities, including France and the UK, have agreed common standards, which differ from the ICAO provisions, in a Joint Aviation Requirement on Flight Crew Licensing (JAR-FCL), which is due to be implemented on 1 July 1999. This will enable pilots to operate aircraft up to the age of 65 years either as Pilot-in-Command or Co-Pilot, provided that only one pilot in the crew is 60 or over. It will be for France to decide how to implement JAR-FCL with respect to their airspace.

Railway Services

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to require privatised railway companies to improve their standard of punctuality. [57905]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Franchising Director is responsible for overseeing train operators, performance levels. Operators of rural and commuter services pay financial penalties for poor performance under their franchise agreements, and a special incentive regime now applies to Great Western Trains. Following unacceptable performance level, the Franchising Director has required all train operators to produce action plans setting out how they will deliver improved performance. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has said that he is prepared to renegotiate franchises in order to secure more rigorous performance standards from train operators.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account the Government take of the level of individual local authority balances when setting (i) expenditure control totals, (ii) standard spending assessments and (iii) revenue support grants; if such balances are correlated to specific purposes; and what plans he has to change the treatment of local authority balances. [57771]

Ms Armstrong: The Government take no account of the level of reserves held by individual local authorities when deciding on overall spending plans or grant distribution. However, in assessing overall spending pressures on local government, we do make a broad assumption about the extent to which local authorities will budget to draw down from reserves. We have no plans to change this treatment. According to information received from local authorities, at 1 April 1998 they held £467.3 million in Local Management of Schools reserves, £2,705.6 million in other earmarked reserves, and £1,845.6 million in unallocated reserves.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the limits for speed limiters fitted to heavy goods vehicles in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) under EU legislation; and if he will make a statement. [58003]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Speed limiters on heavy goods vehicles first used on or after 1 August 1992 and with a maximum gross weight exceeding 7,500 kg but not exceeding 12,000 kg must be calibrated to a set speed not exceeding 60 mph. Speed limiters on heavy goods vehicles with a maximum gross weight exceeding 12,000 kg first used on or after 1 January 1988 must be set so that the stabilised speed of the vehicle does not exceed 90 km/h (55.9 mph). The former class of vehicle is the subject of national legislation but not EC legislation; the latter class is the subject of both.

Midland Main Line

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what Government funding is available for the introduction of new rail services on the Midland main line. [58081]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Midland Main Line Ltd. is already committed under its franchise agreement to introducing a significantly increased service frequency in 1999 and procuring 12 new air conditioned two-car diesel multiple units to operate additional stopping services. Promoters of new services can seek Government support for them under the Rail Passenger Partnership scheme, announced in the Transport White Paper. Over £100 million of funding over 3 years, from April 1999, will be made available under the new Rail Passenger Partnership scheme, the Infrastructure Investment Fund and an increase in funding for the Freight Grant scheme. OPRAF will publish guidance on the operation of the Rail Passenger Partnership Scheme shortly.

Speed Restrictions

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on the introduction of 20mph speed restrictions. [58088]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The responses to the consultation on the proposal to remove the consent requirement for making 20 mph speed limits is complete and final decisions on how to bring the new system into operation will be made shortly.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the European Commission proposal for a new regulation (EC Draft 10902/98) on ozone-depleting substances. [57956]

Mr. Meale: The European Commission adopted a proposal on 1 July 1998 for a new Regulation on ozone-depleting substances to replace the existing Council Regulation (3093/94). The new Regulation is needed to implement recent revisions to the Montreal Protocol, and is therefore broadly welcome. However, the Commission's proposal goes beyond the requirements of the Protocol in a number of respects. In particular, there are proposals for an earlier phase out of methyl bromide, to introduce controls on the production of hydrochlorofluorocarbons and to ban the sale and use of chlorofluorocarbons. My Department has consulted interested parties on these proposals, and we will take their views into account as we formulate our detailed negotiating position.

Local Agenda 21

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide further resources to local authorities seeking to implement local Agenda 21 projects; and if he will make a statement. [58198]

Mr. Meale: We do not believe that further resources are needed since 86 per cent. of local authorities are already committed to producing a Local Agenda 21 strategy by the year 2000. LA21 should not be seen as a separate project, but rather as a means of integrating sustainable development into all the policies and activities of the council. LA21 should encourage them to take a holistic approach to the identification of community priorities and the effective delivery of services through local partnerships, in line with our proposals for modernising local government.

Polegate Bypass

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce a likely start date for work on the Polegate Bypass. [57756]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are currently considering the construction programme for the schemes included in our Targeted Programme of Improvements listed in A New Deal for Trunk Roads.

South Thames Development Route

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what investment his Department has made in the South Thames Development route between the M25 and Woolwich in the last 10 years. [57239]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1998]: During this period, and through the annual system of Transport Policies and Programme allocations, several road building and improvement schemes have been supported along this length of the South Thames Development Route, to the extent of some £48.7m.

London Transport Fares

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the impact of the London Transport fare increases on the number of passengers travelling by public transport. [58214]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1998]: The table shows combined passenger numbers for London Underground and London Buses from the beginning of the financial year 1995–96 to the present. This indicates that, while there are some variations between comparable periods from one year to the next, there is no evidence that passenger numbers decrease after the fare increases in January of each year. Indeed, in the last three periods of each year (which show the number of passenger journeys after the relevant fares increase came into effect), the number of journeys undertaken actually increased month on month.

Figures showing passenger numbers for the rest of this financial year, including the next fares changes, will become available in due course.

London Transport periodically carries out longer term research to test and update its assumptions about the sensitivity of its customers to fares charges. This research is drawn on when fare reviews are being considered.

Connex South Central

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers he has to intervene to secure investment in replacement rolling stock on the services currently provided by Connex South Central. [57777]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no powers to intervene directly, although the Health and Safety Executive has powers to require modifications as to or replacement of rolling stock if it considers that this is necessary for safety reasons. HSE does not consider Connex South Central's slam door stock to be unsafe; but it has proposed that Mark 1 slam door stock such as that operated by Connex South Central must be replaced or modified by 2003.

Connex South Central recently submitted a proposal to extend its franchise. The Franchising Director concluded that he could obtain increased passenger benefits at greater value for money by allowing the franchise to expire after seven years and retendering it as normal. He is exploring with the company whether there are other ways of achieving earlier replacement of rolling stock.

Planning Applications

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning demands for payments by freeholders for retrospective consents relating to planning applications; what plans he has to investigate such cases; and if he will make a statement. [57941]

Mr. Raynsford: We have received a number of representations from leaseholders regarding unreasonable charges being made for the granting of consent. We have also received similar representations in relation to estate rent charges. These are both issues which we will consider as part of our current review of the leasehold system. We hope to issue a consultation paper on leasehold reform shortly.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will reply to the letter of 3 March from Councillor Peter Wyatt of Fiddler's Green, St. Peter's Quay, Totnes, concerning the increase of sewage emissions into the River Dart and the deteriorating water quality. [57343]

Mr. Meale: A reply has been sent to Councillor Wyatt today and I have written to the hon. Member to explain the circumstances.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Contingency and Operational Equipment Exhibition, Wembley

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he took to monitor the equipment being exhibited at the Contingency and Operational Equipment Exhibition at Wembley on 22 to 24 September. [57331]

Mr. Boateng: This was a privately organised exhibition and was not monitored by the Home Office. However, members of staff from the Public Scientific Development Branch (part of the Home Office Police Policy Directorate) attended the exhibition in their capacity as advisers to the police service on law enforcement equipment.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what prosecutions are pending as a result of offences committed by companies attempting to trade in torture equipment at the Contingency and Operational Equipment Exhibition at Wembley on 22 to 24 September. [57332]

Mr. Boateng: I am not aware of any prosecutions pending which arise from the Contingency and Operational Equipment Exhibition at Wembley on 22 to 24 September 1998.

Drug Treatment and Testing Orders

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what start-up funding is being made available for the Gloucestershire Probation Service pilot for the new drug treatment and testing orders. [57883]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government have made available £750,000 from October 1998—March 1999 and are making available a further £1,000,000 in 1999–2000 to cover all costs in relation to the piloting of the drug treatment and testing order. The amount is proportionately larger in the current financial year in order to cover start-up costs. This money, taken as a total over the entire pilot period, is being divided equally between Gloucestershire and the other two pilot areas, Merseyside and south-east London. Gloucestershire Probation Service will therefore receive a total of £559,333 to fund the pilot.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the use of beagles for tests on Viagra conducted in the United Kingdom. [57880]

Mr. George Howarth: I have received a number of letters on this subject.

I understand that the drug was originally developed and tested some years ago, as part of a research programme into treatments for cardiovascular conditions. During clinical trials on patients, the properties for which Viagra is now known were discovered.

Impotence is a serious medical condition, and one which can cause appreciable stress and other forms of suffering. Existing treatments are limited, and not without adverse effects. Further research, involving animals, has taken place to:

define the specific clinical conditions that Viagra might be used to treat; and reduce the adverse, cardiovascular effects in clinical use.

Young People (Alcohol Consumption)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives his Department is currently supporting to reduce the level of alcohol consumption by those aged under 16 years. [57885]

Mr. George Howarth: The Ministerial Group on Alcopops, which I chair, issued a statement on 17 July 1997, setting out a programme of action to tackle alcohol misuse by those under age. The programme included a strengthened industry code of practice on packaging and promoting alcoholic drinks, an expanded industry proof of age card scheme, action by the courts and police to help prevent under-age sales and legislation to make it harder for children to obtain alcohol. We are currently considering the progress made and expect to announce our conclusions later this month.

Young Offenders Institute, Aylesbury

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the Government's response to the report by Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons on HM Young Offenders Institute, Aylesbury. [57859]

Mr. George Howarth: The report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons on Aylesbury Young Offenders Institution was published on 28 October 1998.

The report contained no recommendations to the Secretary of State, but 160 to the Director General, the area manager and the governor. Under the protocol for handling reports agreed between the Director General and the Chief Inspector last year, the Prison Services gives consideration to each recommendation and draws up a response and action plan within 30 days of publication.

The action plan is kept under close review by senior managers and is available, in an updated form, to the Chief Inspector when he undertakes a follow up inspection.

Youth Justice Board

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the operation of the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales. [58562]

Mr. Straw: The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales, established under section 41 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, came into operation on 30 September 1998.

The members of the Board are:

Lord Warner of Brockley (Chair)

Mr. Rob Allen, Director of Research and Development, National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders

Mr. Jonathan Black, Clerk to the Justices, North East and North West Hampshire

Mr. Cedric Fullwood, lately Chief Probation Officer, Greater Manchester

Ms Joyce Moseley, formerly a Director of Social Services

Dr. Theodore Mutale, consultant child and adolescent forensic psychiatrist

Ms Janet Paraskeva JP, Director for England National Lottery Charities Board

Mr. Charles Pollard, Chief Constable, Thames Valley Police

Mrs. Annabella Scott JP, Inner London youth panel

Mr. Martin Stephenson, Chief Executive, INCLUDE

Ms Lorna Whyte, a member of the Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Charles Wilson, lately Managing Director of the Mirror Group of newspapers.

The Board is responsible for monitoring the operation and performance of the youth justice system as a whole, and advising the Government on this and on the drawing up of standards for the local provision of youth justice services and for custodial regimes for juveniles. The Board will also identify and promote good practice in the provision of youth justice services and in work to prevent youth offending, which will help deliver the Government's programme of reform of the youth justice system.

In support of this work, the Government are providing £85 million over three years from April 1999 for a youth justice development fund, which will be used to support the development by local authorities and other bodies, including in the voluntary sector, of programmes and projects, including bail support, to prevent or tackle offending by children and young people.

Boundary Commission

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take on the report of the interim review of the Boundary Commission for England. [58563]

Mr. Straw: I have today laid before Parliament the report of the interim review of the Boundary Commission for England, together with a draft Order in Council for giving effect, without modification, to the recommendations contained in the report.

Prevention of Terrorism Legislation

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he has made for this year's review of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989. [58567]

Mr. Straw: I am pleased to announce that Mr. John Rowe QC has accepted my invitation to carry out the annual review of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989, including those provisions inserted by the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998, for 1998 and the following two years.

European Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce Protocol Four of the European Convention on Human Rights. [57792]

Kate Hoey: Ratification of Protocol 4 will be possible only if potential conflicts with our domestic laws can be resolved. There is a particular concern in relation to Article 3(2) of the Protocol which protects the right of nationals not to be excluded from their home state. This could be taken as conferring the right of abode in the United Kingdom on various categories of British nationals who do not have it.

Security Services

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of Special Branch in respect of the retention of files on individuals where those files were created because the individuals concerned were suspected of subversion; what rights are available to the individuals concerned; and if he will make a statement. [57569]

Mr. Straw: All Special Branches in England, Wales and Scotland operate under the "Guidelines on Special Branch Work in Great Britain", published in July 1994. In addition to subversion, the Guidelines also cover terrorism, espionage, sabotage and counter-proliferation. Paragraph 20 of the Guidelines provides that:

> Each Special Branch should . . . maintain an effective system both for updating information where necessary and for the identification and destruction of information which can no longer be clearly related to the discharge of its functions.

If an individual has reason to believe that a particular Special Branch is failing to comply with the Guidelines, he may address a complaint either to the Chief Constable of the force concerned, or he can approach the Police Complaints Authority. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary undertakes a regular programme of inspections of Special Branches.

General Pinochet

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requests for the extradition of General Pinochet he has received from (a) the Spanish Government, (b) a competent authority in Spain specifying that authority and (c) any other Government or competent authority specifying the same; when each such request was received; and if he will place copies of each in the Library. [58191]

Mr. Straw: I have received no formal request for the extradition of Senator Pinochet from the Spanish Government, or any other government, or from any competent authority in Spain or any other country.

The Metropolitan Police received, on Friday 16 October, via Interpol, a request for the provisional arrest of Senator Pinochet issued by the 5th Magistrates' Court in Madrid. Disclosure of that document is a matter for the Metropolitan Police.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what notification, pursuant to section 8 of the Extradition Act 1989, he has received from the Bow Street Magistrate of any provisional warrant issued by the Magistrate for the arrest of General Pinochet; and what consideration he has given or proposes to give to the exercise of his powers under section 8(4) of that Act to cancel any such warrant. [58192]

Mr. Straw: The Extradition Section at the Home Office received notification on 19 October of the first provisional warrant for Senator Pinochet issued on 16 October by the Bow Street Magistrate under section 8(1)(b) of the Extradition Act 1989 and received notification on 23 October of a further provisional warrant issued on 22 October by the Bow Street Magistrate.

I was invited, on 21 October, by Senator Pinochet's legal representatives to exercise my discretionary power under section 8(4) and to cancel the first provisional warrant issued on 16 October. I had taken no decision before legal proceedings were launched in the Divisional Court on 22 October. The Divisional Court, in its judgment of 28 October, dismissed application for leave to move for judicial review of my failure to exercise my discretionary powers under section 8(4) of the Act.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Arms Exports

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to reduce the flow of small arms to developing countries. [58185]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID), along with the FCO and MOD, is involved in providing advice to the DTI in the export licensing process. Applications are carefully considered against our national criteria and the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports. These codes require HMG to take into account whether the proposed export would seriously hamper the sustainable development of the recipient country; and to consider the risk that the equipment might be diverted to an undesirable end-user.

We are also tackling illicit transfers of small arms. Together with the FCO we are developing the EU Programme for Preventing and Combating Illicit Trafficking in Conventional Arms. We funded a seminar in Southern Africa that produced a regional EU/South Africa Development Committee (SADC) action plan tailored to the problems of the region. We hope that this will be endorsed by EU/SADC Ministers in Vienna this week.

We are also funding, through the UNDP, the implementation of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) moratorium on the import, export and manufacture of small arms and light weapons. We warmly welcome the declaration of this moratorium in the final communique of the ECOWAS Heads of State meeting held in Abuja on 30–31 October.

My Department is keen to support further practical initiatives which help reduce the availability of small arms and ammunition.

Security Sector Reform

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her Department's policy on support for security sector reform initiatives in post-conflict countries. [58187]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) recognises the special need for security sector reform in post-conflict countries, especially when that sector has been responsible for creating the conflict. Complete restructuring may be needed in some cases. This may include extensive demobilisation of surplus troops which often requires external support, especially in poorer countries. Poor countries need security and stability to be restored promptly if development and progress towards the elimination of poverty are to be resumed. DFID is currently studying its approach to security sector reform in order to strengthen this work.

Congo

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [58159]

Clare Short: The UK is deeply concerned about the impact of the ongoing conflict upon the people of the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC). We are pressing all parties to the conflict to agree to a cease-fire and to reach a negotiated settlement. The UK has urged all parties not to escalate the conflict in the east following the fall of Kindu to the rebels. It is clear that a resolution cannot be achieved militarily. A negotiated settlement must address the rights of all sections of Congolese society, as well as the legitimate security concerns of its neighbours, whilst respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the DRC itself.

The situation in the west around Kinshasa, stable for several weeks, is now reported to be deteriorating and ethnic tensions, as demonstrated by attacks upon, and detention of, Congolese Tutsi, remain high.

Conditions in the east remain poor, with much of the local infrastructure damaged or destroyed. The conflict and movement of refugees are generating a significant requirement for humanitarian aid, but access is a major problem.

The UK is ready to respond to appeals from UN agencies and NGOs. We are already supporting a UNICEF project in the western Bas-Congo region to re-stock and rehabilitate health centres damaged in the conflict. Efforts to promote tolerance and respect for human rights are also being supported. Prior to the current conflict, UK humanitarian assistance to DRC during 1998 stood at almost £350,000.

Albania

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions her Department has held in the last 12 months on the issue of the welfare and protection of children with the Government of Albania. [57764]

Clare Short: My department has been working to improve children's welfare in Albania with Children's Aid Direct and the Albanian Education Authorities.

We have provided £209,000 for the integration of disabled children into mainstream primary and kindergarten education.

Aid Agencies (Fraud)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the report by the European Commission on controls over the budget of the European Community Humanitarian Office and the misuse of funds by aid agencies. [57919]

Clare Short: The Government are very concerned at the recent allegations of fraud within the Commission notably in the EC Humanitarian Office (ECHO). We are strongly committed to fighting fraud inside the Community institutions by the most effective machinery that can be devised.

The Commission's anti-fraud unit takes the lead in fraud investigations. We take a close interest in the work of the unit in the fight against fraud and strongly support measures to improve its effectiveness. We will look carefully at the European Parliament's ideas for an independent fraud office and at any proposals brought forward by the Commission.

Microcredit Schemes

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures her Department has undertaken to encourage British banks' involvement in microcredit schemes. [58157]

Clare Short: We recognise the importance and potential benefits of involving British financial institutions in microfinance. In many developing countries, however, it may be more appropriate and feasible to develop the capacity of local banks.

Specific measures which DFID has taken to encourage British banks' involvement in microfinance include the following:

DIFD supported the Centre for the Study of Financial Innovation (CSFI) in the organisation of a series of meetings in the City of London on the subject of microfinance. This led to a report 'Credit where credit is due: bringing microfinance into the mainstream' which was published by CSFI. A particular target of this publication is British commercial and merchant banks, to encourage them to play a more active role in microfinance.

The Department is actively working with commercial banks overseas to induce them to lend either direct to small and microenterprises or to lend to retail microfinance institutions, usually by DFID providing some form of guarantee.

DFID is supporting research on linking self-help groups (and informal credit providers) with formal financial institutions in developing countries. Central to this research is the idea of 'linkage-banking' where banks, British or local, are linked to co-operative groups which can then provide microfinance on a wider scale.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the humanitarian situation in Sudan. [58158]

Clare Short: The humanitarian situation remains acute. In Bahr el Ghazal mortality rates have fallen but in some parts of the region they remain unacceptably high. The World Food Programme has sufficient resources to meet all food aid needs in Sudan until April 1999. We continue to press for an extension to the cease-fire beyond Bahr el Ghazal because insecurity hampers access in many areas both to assess needs and to deliver supplies.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will discuss with her American counterparts the provision of (a) anti-TB drugs and (b) chloroquinine and other anti-malarial drugs to the Sudan in quantities which would have been produced by the El Shifa factory, prior to its destruction. [57980]

Clare Short: I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 3 November 1998, Official Report, column 403.

Debt Relief

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals her Department has for strengthening the linkage between debt relief and poverty reduction. [58162]

Clare Short: In providing bilateral debt relief, my Department examines closely the commitment of recipient governments to the achievement of the international development targets, to transparent government, and to the rooting out of corruption and mismanagement. In this way, we can be confident that those funds that would have been spent on debt service will be redirected towards poverty reducing activities such as healthcare and primary education. We encourage other bilateral donors to apply the same criteria when providing debt relief.

We are pressing for the relationship between debt relief and poverty reduction to be examined by the IMF and World Bank as part of the forthcoming fundamental review of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative, and for any lessons learned to be applied in implementing the programme.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps were taken at the recent IMF/World Bank annual meeting to improve the terms and conditions of debt relief initiatives for developing countries. [58184]

Clare Short: Ministers endorsed the extension of the entry deadline for the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative from 1998 to the end of 2000, to give more countries a chance to qualify. They also agreed to add a degree of flexibility to the process for countries receiving post-conflict assistance programmes. A decision was taken to carry out a comprehensive review of the Initiative as early as 1999. We shall be pressing for this review to consider carefully whether the current HIPC Initiative delivers adequate debt relief to those countries in need.

HIV-AIDS

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what money her Department has given to HIV-AIDS vaccine development initiatives since May 1997. [58188]

Clare Short: The UK is the first government to make a contribution—£200,000—to the International Aids Vaccine Initiative (IAVI), to assist in the development of a safe, effective and inexpensive vaccine to prevent HIV infection. In addition, £300,000 of the Department for International Development's overall grant to the Medical Research Council for 1997–98 went to support research into an HIV vaccine, topical virucides and microbicides. A further £300,000 is committed for 1998–99.

Global Economic Crisis

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to monitor the impact of the global economic crisis on people living in poverty in developing countries. [58163]

Clare Short: My Department is extremely concerned about the impact of the global economic crisis on poverty which is already severe in many countries, notably Indonesia. Our monitoring of the impact overall relies on work being undertaken by the International Financial Institutions, especially the World Bank, supplemented by work by UK and other academic researchers. Reliable country level data on poverty impact are limited, but the latest forecasts for growth in trade and overall economic growth indicate that the crisis is already having a severe and negative impact overall on global economic performance with adverse implications for poor people in developing countries.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Energy Consumption

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are (a) the crude and (b) the temperature-adjusted figures for UK energy consumption in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement on progress towards compliance with emission targets. [56769]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 27 October 1998]: The latest available figures for unadjusted and temperature corrected energy consumption in the UK are as follows:

UK total inland primary energy consumption[1]

	Million tonnes of oil equivalent
	1995	1996	1997
(a) Unadjusted	220.8	233.0	226.9
(b) Temperature corrected	226.1	232.1	233.5

[1] Excludes non-energy use of fuels

Source:

Digest of UK Energy Statistics, Department of Trade and Industry

A consultation document on climate change was published on 26 October. This outlines various options for meeting the UK's emission targets.

Reducing greenhouse gas emissions is a key objective of this Government's energy policy. The Government are confident that their energy policy is consistent with achieving their climate change targets. Overall, it is estimated that carbon dioxide emissions decreased by eight per cent. between 1990 and 1997, largely because of reduced emissions from electricity generation.

Marine Foresight Panel

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons he plans to terminate the Marine Foresight Panel. [57074]

Mr. Battle: The next round of Foresight is due to start in April 1999. There has been wide consultation over the format and content during recent months. Final decisions will be taken shortly.

Export Credits

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the total sum paid out by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in respect of guarantees given to foreign companies or Governments in respect of contracts relating to defence and security equipment in each of the last three financial years. [56835]

Mr. Mandelson: ECGD issues guarantees to persons carrying on business in the United Kingdom in respect of the payment risk arising from supplies of goods and services to persons carrying on business outside the United Kingdom.

Under such guarantees the total value of claims payments made by ECGD in each of the last three years in respect of defence business was as follows:

£ million

Financial year	Value of claims paid
1995–96	107.3
1996–97	49.7
1997–98	38.8

Meteorites

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the potential threat to satellites of the leonid meteorite shower in November; and if he will make a statement. [56935]

Mr. Battle: The threat to satellites from the expected peaks in the Leonid meteor shower in November 1998 and in November 1999 has been assessed by the European Space Agency with support from the British National Space Centre. The results of the assessment have been circulated to satellite operators and the United Kingdom space industry. The assessment concludes that the meteor shower poses a particular risk around 17–18 November this year and the next few years and that it could damage satellites through physical impact or by electrostatic interference. A number of measures are recommended to spacecraft operators to minimise the risk. These include minimising the cross sectional area of the spacecraft facing the meteor shower, turning off sensitive equipment and reinforcing the operating team in order to cope with potential anomalies.

I will send a copy of the report to the hon. Member and place copies in the Libraries of the House.

Policy Proposals (Quality of Life)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what methods of measurements and from what base lines his Department employs in assessing the quality of life implications of policy proposals; and how these were selected. [55768]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 2 November 1998]: My Department uses a range of measures to assess policy proposals and departmental programmes consistent with relevant guidance from HM Treasury and other government departments. Risks, costs and benefits to business, the citizen and, where relevant, the environment are assessed for each regulatory proposal.

EU Structural Funds (Staffordshire)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future European Structural Funds regime for Staffordshire. [57943]

Mrs. Roche: The negotiations with the Commission and other Member States on the reform of the Structural and Cohesion Funds for 2000–06 are continuing. It is too early to predict the outcome for individual regions. Only when negotiations are complete will the future Structural and Cohesion Funds regime be known. In June 1998 the European Council set a deadline for agreement of the end of March 1999.

The Government will continue to negotiate vigorously for a fair and affordable deal for the UK and its regions.

Ministerial Visit (Cuba)

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total cost to his Department of his recent visit to Cuba; how many DTI officials accompanied him; and with which members of the Cuban Government and with which senior Cuban civil servants he held discussions. [57025]

Mr. Mandelson: I have not visited Cuba.

Electromagnetic Fields

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement in respect of the ICNIRP international guidelines and their relevance in determining safe exposure to the non-thermal effects of electromagnetic fields. [57339]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

I am advised that the guidelines for limiting exposure to electromagnetic fields recently produced by the International Commission on Non-Ionising Radiation Protection (ICNIRP) were developed after a comprehensive review of published scientific papers. The proposed exposure restrictions are based solely on established effects. ICNIRP concluded that the available data on the non-thermal and potential long term effects of exposure, such as an increase risk of cancer, are insufficient to provide a basis for exposure restrictions.

DEFENCE

RAF Pilots

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many fully trained pilots have requested to leave the RAF in each of the last five years. [55818]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The number of trained RAF pilots who applied for premature voluntary release in each of the last five years was as follows:

Year ending 31 March	Applications
1994	16
1995	38
1996	45
1997	60
1998	76

Aero Engines

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department (a) has counted, (b) currently counts and (c) plans to count Rolls-Royce sales of aero-engines to Boeing as a legitimate offset purchase for the purposes of offset agreements between his Department and US weapons manufacturers; and if he will make a statement. [56475]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 October 1998]: Before adopting a policy of Industrial Participation, IP, for defence procurement in 1990, the MOD counted the sale of aero engines from Rolls-Royce to Boeing as part of our offset agreement with the company. We are currently considering a claim from Boeing for IP credits for aero engine components supplied by Rolls-Royce. This, and any future Rolls-Royce sales of aero engines and components, must conform with the IP agreement existing between the MOD and the offshore company.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the decision of the Army Personnel Centre to benchmark performance against only the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force Manning Agencies. [57166]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Benchmarking can take many forms and is one of various management tools available to promote efficiency. The obvious place for the Army Personnel Centre to start is with the Manning Agencies for the Navy and Air Force. It has separately undertaken a self-assessment against the European Business Excellence Model, as noted in the Army Personnel Agency's Annual Report, within the Public Sector Benchmarking Project. The scope for benchmarking with other organisations will be kept under regular review.

Territorial Army Budget

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if receipts from the sale of TA drill halls (a) will contribute towards his Department's target of £700 million from sale of property and (b) be required to make up an element of the TA budget for the next financial year. [57586]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Receipts from the sale of any Territorial Army centres will form part of my Department's overall future financial provision. Funding for the TA in the next financial year is not dependent on monies generated as a result of such sales.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal (Interviews)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many unemployed 18 to 24 year olds invited to an initial New Deal interview had failed to respond by 30 September; and what percentage this constitutes of those 18 to 24 year olds invited to an initial interview. [57868]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 2 November 1998]: The latest Government Statistical figures (to the end of August 1998) show that almost 6,600 18–24 year olds have left the New Deal and Jobseekers Allowance before attending their initial New Deal interview. This constitutes 4 per cent. of all those who have started on the New Deal.

Where a young person fails to attend an interview following 3 invitations, and continues to try and claim JSA, they will be referred to adjudication. Figures to the end of September show that over 600 young people have already had sanctions imposed for failing to attend a New Deal interview.

New Deal (Benefit Cuts)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many 18 to 24 year olds had their benefits cut for refusing to take up a New Deal option by 30 September. [57870]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 2 November 1998]: The latest available analysis shows that there were 1,352 New Deal participants aged between 18 and 24 to whom Jobseekers Allowance sanctions were applied during the period 1 January to 30 September 1998, of which 112 were for failing to take up a New Deal Option. A further 210 people have been referred to adjudication during that period for neglecting to avail themselves of an Option, failing or refusing to attend an Option.

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what initiatives his Department is currently supporting to reduce the level of alcohol consumption by those aged under 16 years. [57888]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Education about alcohol is already a statutory requirement of the National Curriculum. The Department for Education and Employment has made increased support of £7 million available to Local Education Authorities this year, through the Standards Fund, to assist schools and the youth service to deliver effective education about drugs, including alcohol. The Department is also working closely with other Government Departments in taking forward the Government's 10 year Anti-Drugs Strategy, published earlier this year. Whilst the focus is on illegal drugs, alcohol is also addressed within the overall Strategy. To support and underpin the Strategy, we will also shortly be issuing targeted guidance to schools and the youth service on the effective delivery of education relating to substance misuse. In addition, the Department is represented on the Ministerial Group on Alcopops, which is taking forward the Government's work to combat underage drinking.

In partnership with the Department of Health, the Department launched earlier this year the National Healthy Schools Scheme. This Initiative is part of the wider Healthy Schools Initiative. We are making £2 million of support available this year to fund eight health and education pilot projects, one in each of the NHS regions. Criteria for healthy schools belonging to the scheme will be drawn up and an integral part of this will be for the school to deliver a comprehensive drug education programme. That programme will have to include education about alcohol.

Asthma

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the guidelines covering the responsibilities of local education authorities in catering within schools for the medical needs of children with (a) asthma and (b) allergy-related anaphylaxis. [57914]

Mr. Charles Clarke: In October 1996 the Department published Circular 14/96, "Supporting Pupils With Medical Needs in School", in conjunction with the Department of Health. This summarised the main legal provisions that affect schools' responsibilities for managing pupils' medical needs. At the same time, the Department also published "Supporting Pupils With Medical Needs: A Good Practice Guide", which includes sections dealing specifically with asthma and anaphylaxis. Both publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

School Expenditure

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the amount of money from delegated budgets underspent by schools in Hereford and Worcester in each year since 1989–90. [57922]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the amount held as balances by LEA schools in Hereford and Worcester for each of the financial years 1992–93, 1993–94, 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98. Information regarding school balances/deficits prior to 1992–93 is not held centrally.

Balances held by LEA schools in Hereford and Worcester

Financial year	£
1992–93	13,867,000
1993–94	13,855,000
1994–95	12,294,181
1995–96	9,935,332
1996–97	9,940,809
1997–98	10,564,756

Supported Employment Scheme

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the funding for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 for the supported employment scheme for disabled people. [57708]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 2 November 1998]: Expenditure on the Supported Employment Programme for 1997–98 was £155.6 million. The allocated budget for the Programme for 1998–99 is £155.1 million. However, as announced last week we have made an additional £30 million available to help disabled people get jobs, half of which will be spent on supported employment.

People with a disability or long term illness will also be able to benefit from the New Deal for Disabled People for which £195 million has been set aside for the lifetime of this Parliament.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the future of section 11 funding. [57927]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment will shortly make an announcement about a new Standards Fund grant to replace the education element of section 11 grant. In the first year of the grant, 1999–2000, allocations will reflect Local Education Authorities' existing allocations.

Student Loans Company

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the performance of the Student Loans Company with regard to (a) responses to letters, (b) responses to telephone calls and (c) delays in payment of loans since the start of the academic year. [57864]

Mr. Mudie: As of 30 October, the Student Loans Company had paid out 283,100 loans. 99.7 per cent. were paid within 21 days against a target of 98 per cent. I have received no written representations about the Company's performance in this academic year, but DfEE officials have received 15 telephone calls about borrowers not being able to contact the Company by telephone. I understand that the Company has now updated both its telephone message system and website to handle certain calls. Some correspondence to the Company has been delayed, although most replies have been issued within 14 days. I understand that the Company has resolved the complaints it has received on telephone calls and correspondence.

Foreign Languages

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has to increase the number of school leavers who attain fluency in a second European modern language. [56857]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 3 November 1998]: Under the National Curriculum, all pupils must study English and all secondary school pupils must study a modern foreign language. Secondary schools must offer one of eight working languages of the European Union, and they can also offer other languages. In practice around 97 per cent. of pupils study French, German, Spanish, or a combination of these. The National Curriculum programmes of study give equal weight to four communication skills: listening and responding; speaking; reading and responding; and writing. We also support language learning through sponsorship of the Centre for Information on Language Teaching and Research (CILT), which encourages good practice through a range of information and advice to language teachers.

Primary Schools

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many new infant schools have been (a) started and (b) completed in each of the last five years; and in which council areas the schools are located; [55814]

(2) how many new primary schools have been (a) started and (b) completed in each of the last five years; and in which council areas they are located. [57164]

Ms Estelle Morris: No statutory proposals to establish new infant schools have been approved in the last three years. The table shows the number of proposals approved and implemented in each Local Education Authority to establish new maintained primary schools in each of the last three years. The list includes proposals which have been determined by the Local Education Authority. A number of proposals have been decided but not yet implemented. Accurate information for earlier years is not available.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to publish the Government's response to consultation on the Green Paper "Excellence for all Children: Meeting Special Educational Needs". [58535]

Ms Estelle Morris: Consultation on the Green Paper "Excellence for all Children: Meeting Special Educational Needs" generated many thoughtful ideas and comments. In the light of these, and the advice of the National Advisory Group on Special Educational Needs (SEN), we have today published "Meeting Special Educational Needs: A programme of action". Copies have been placed in the Library. Copies will also be sent to all MPs.

The Action Programme sets out the progress we will make in five key areas:

- better support for parents and carers of children with SEN;
- improving the SEN framework, including revising the SEN Code of Practice;
- promoting the inclusion of more children with SEN in mainstream schools where parents want it and appropriate support can be provided and developing the role of special schools as part of an inclusive education system;
- developing the knowledge and skills of all staff working with children with SEN; and
- supporting a range of initiatives to promote partnership in SEN, locally, regionally and nationally.

Science Teachers

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures his Department is taking to increase the supply of science teachers. [57944]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Last week, my hon. Friend the Minister for School Standards announced a package of short-term measures to boost teacher recruitment, intended in particular to tackle problems recruiting secondary teachers in science and maths. Our proposals include:

- a £5,000 incentive for all those graduates training in and going on to teach science or maths;
- a new scheme to match 600 of the 7,000 people who have already told the Teacher Training Agency (TTA) that they would like to train on the job as teachers, to existing vacancies as science and maths teachers;
- the establishment of a new network of advisers at regional level to co-ordinate and energise local recruitment activities in areas of the country where shortages are most acute;
- mobilising the Employment Service to encourage unemployed people with the right experience and qualifications to train or re-train as teachers; and
- launching a drive to encourage returners to teaching.

The package will give added impetus to the strong programme of action already being taken forward by the TTA to boost teacher recruitment.

Looking ahead, our Green Paper on the modernisation of the teaching profession, to be published before the end of the year, will propose a range of fundamental reforms to improve the attractiveness of teaching as a career.

A-level Physics Curriculum

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the effectiveness of the A-level physics curriculum and exam in preparing students for degree courses in (i) physics and (ii) engineering. [57946]

Mr. Mudie: The Department has not commissioned or evaluated research on this specific issue. However, the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) has recently completed a consultation on the development of new subject criteria for all A-level syllabuses, including physics, in the light of the Government's decisions on the future of A-levels following the recent Qualifying for Success consultation. Both consultations fully involved both higher education institutions and organisations representing the interests of physics and engineering. QCA will be advising Ministers on the outcome of its recent consultation shortly.

SCOTLAND

Agriculture Subsidies

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total amount of public subsidies and support paid to agriculture in Scotland, the average amount per constituency and the amount paid to support the agriculture industry in Glasgow, Pollok in the last year for which figures are available. [57186]

Mr. Macdonald: Direct subsidies paid to farmers in Scotland for the latest year (1997) for which figures are available totalled £497 million. This information is not collected by Parliamentary Constituency.

Catering Courses

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many students there are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time catering education in Scotland; [57061]

(2) how many colleges offer catering education; how many graduates of such courses undertook further training in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement on the level of provision for catering courses in Scotland. [57062]

Mrs. Liddell: Thirty-eight further education colleges offered catering courses during academic year 1996–97 (the last year for which full figures are available), which were attended by 2,199 full-time and 8,028 part-time students.

Destination data are not collected centrally, except in respect of full-time students on higher education courses studied in further education colleges. In respect of the 179 such students on catering courses in 1995–96 whose destination is known, 57 undertook further full-time study.

College boards of management have a statutory duty, under section 12(1) of the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992 to ensure that their college provides suitable further education, having regard to the likely needs of potential students of the college. The fact that so many of Scotland's colleges offer catering courses suggests that boards of management are responding adequately to local demand for such provision.

Defence Diversification Strategy

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on what action Scottish Enterprise has taken on the development of a national defence diversification strategy for Scotland in the last 18 months; and what plans it has to produce a report on this matter. [56378]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 November 1998]: In Scotland, defence diversification has been taken forward as a business development activity at local level through Local Enterprise Companies rather than by Scottish Enterprise at a national level. The Local Enterprise Companies that have had most involvement in this activity have been Fife Enterprise, Glasgow Development Agency and Lothian and Edinburgh Enterprise Ltd.

HIV-AIDS

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people with AIDS died in (a) Scotland and (b) each health board region of Scotland in (a) 1988, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998 at the latest available date. [56984]

Mr. Galbraith: The information is set out in the following table:

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people were newly diagnosed HIV positive (i) by probable means of transmission and (ii) in total in (a) Scotland and (b) each health board region of Scotland, for each year from 1988 to 1997, and for 1998 at the latest available date; [56987]

(2) if he will list the cumulative number of people who had been diagnosed HIV positive (i) by probable means of transmission and (ii) in total in (a) Scotland and (b) each health board region of Scotland, for each year from 1988 to 1997, and for 1998 at the latest available date; [56988]

(3) if he will list the cumulative number of people who had been diagnosed HIV positive and not known to have died (i) by probable means of transmission and (ii) in total in (a) Scotland and (b) each health board region of Scotland, for each year from 1988 to 1997, and for 1998 at the latest available date. [56989]

Mr. Galbraith: As the information requested is lengthy, I have arranged to place the details in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing (Crossnacreevy Villages)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the number of homes (a) which have received planning approval and (b) for which application is presently under consideration by the planning department in the vicinity of Crossnacreevy villages. [56704]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Planning Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart, and I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 2 November 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question about housing development in the vicinity of Crossnacreevy Villages. For the purposes of this Question, I have regarded the vicinity of Crossnacreevy Villages as being the following area:

Ballygowan Road between Roselawn and Gransha Road;

Church Road for half a mile from Crossnacreevy; and Houston Road for half a mile on the west side of Ballygowan Road.

Our records show that only planning applications for individual houses in the countryside, within the above area, have ever been received. I can confirm that 10 of these applications were approved, while one was refused.

We are not processing any current applications for housing at this moment in time.

I hope this information meets your needs.

Inward Investment

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to encourage inward investment projects in South Down. [57070]

Mr. Ingram: The most recent initiative by the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland to encourage inward investment in South Down is the development of the industrial site at Belfast Road, Downpatrick, the first phase of which has been completed. The opportunity presented by this development and other locations in South Down is brought to the attention of appropriate investors during their visits to Northern Ireland, for example through the IDB's recent roadshow in North America.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she proposes to consult with the new Northern Ireland Assembly on the outcome of the Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. [58564]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have today sent a consultation paper on the Government's proposals for allocations to Northern Ireland programmes to the Initial Presiding Officer, as a reference under the Northern Ireland Elections Act (1998), requesting the views of the Assembly. Decisions on allocations will be announced next month in light of the consultation exercise. Copies of the Assembly consultation paper have also been placed in the Library, and are available from the Vote Office.

Prevention of Terrorism Legislation

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements she has made for this year's review of the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1996. [58565]

Marjorie Mowlam: I am pleased to announce that Mr. John Jermyn Rowe, QC has accepted my invitation to carry out the annual review for 1998 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1996, including those provisions inserted by the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998. If necessary, Mr. Rowe will also carry out reviews for the following two years.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she will respond to the Third Report of the Northern Ireland Affairs Committee of session 1997–98 (HC 337) on the composition, recruitment and training of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and what will be the basis of her response. [58566]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have today sent my response to the Committee and have, by the Committee's leave, placed a copy of my response in the Library.

I have consulted, amongst others, the Chief Constable and the Police Authority who have both given a broad welcome to the Report. The report provides a timely benchmark of opinion for the Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland set up following the Good Friday Agreement as it considers the question of policing arrangements which can fairly represent all sections of the community in Northern Ireland and have widespread community support.

The Government have accepted a number of recommendations made by the Committee. These include:

Police officers who already belong to organisations such as the Loyal Orders, the Ancient Order of Hibernians and Freemasonry should register their membership of such organisations, initially on a voluntary basis;

There should be a more rigorous system of registration in place for new recruits; and

Registration should be on a private basis with RUC management and perhaps other relevant bodies such as the Independent Commission for Police Complaints.

A new working group is to be set up to consider how the proposals will be implemented. The working group will meet soon and examine:

how information relating to the private interests of police officers and others should be gathered and held;

how, if at all, such information should be available publicly;

which societies, bodies or interests should be covered;

which public agencies besides the police should consider schemes for registration; and what, if any, further measures might be required to ensure that a system of registration works.

The Government have considered but rejected for now the proposal that membership of organisations mentioned by the Select Committee should in effect prevent someone from becoming a police officer. The question of a police service which can fairly represent all sections of the community in Northern Ireland is one of the main terms of reference of the Independent Commission on Policing and it would be peremptory to go further in advance of the Commission's findings.

Abortion

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many abortions were carried out in Northern Ireland in the latest year for which figures are available; [56669]

(2) how many abortions were performed by each health and social services board in each of the past five years for which figures are available. [56670]

Mr. McFall: The table outlines the number of abortions performed in each Health and Social Board area in Northern Ireland in the years 1996–97 and 1997–98.

Health and Social Services Board	Number of abortions 1996–97	1997–98
Eastern	782	706
Northern	368	336
Southern	369	315
Western	367	324
Total	1,886	1,681

The overwhelming majority of these abortions were classified as spontaneous abortions.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what grounds abortion can be performed in Northern Ireland (a) in the first and second trimester and (b) in the third trimester of pregnancy. [56671]

Mr. McFall: The law on abortion in Northern Ireland is governed by a combination of statute including the Offences Against the Person Act (1861), the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 1945 and Case Law (R v. Bourne (1939)). Therapeutic terminations are carried out in Northern Ireland on strictly medical grounds (eg to save the life of the mother) irrespective of the stage of pregnancy.

PRIME MINISTER

Inter-ministerial Group on Older People

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the interim conclusion of the Inter-ministerial Group on Older People presented to him in July. [57900]

The Prime Minister: We value the positive contribution that older people make to our society and believe that their skills and experience should be utilised to the fullest extent.

As well as boosting NHS funding and tackling crime, specific measures the Government have announced to improve the lives of pensioners include:

From April 1999 a minimum income guarantee of at least £75 per week for single pensioners and £116.60 per week for couples;

VAT on domestic fuel cut to the lowest possible level of 5 per cent.;

free eye tests for all pensioners;

concessionary travel across the country; and introduced winter fuel payments which provide extra help to over 7 million pensioner households towards their heaviest fuel bill.

We are also determined to ensure that the enormous contribution made to our national life by older people is properly recognised and that their concerns are fully represented in policy making. I am very pleased with the progress made so far by the Inter-Ministerial Group. It has identified three priority themes: productive aging (practical measures to help older people remain active through work); care (including the health care-housing interface and transport); and consultation and involvement with older people themselves. The new Performance and Innovation Unit which I announced on 28 July 1998, Official Report, columns 133–34, now being set up in the Cabinet Office, will consider productive aging as one of their first projects.

The Inter-Ministerial Group is planning to hold a seminar with a wide range of groups later this month to discuss the key themes in more depth. It has also commissioned research into the attitudes and aspirations of older people.

Portschach Talks

Mr. Trend: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the European Expansion Plan as discussed at the Portschach EU talks; what level of funding was discussed; and from where such funding would originate. [58008]

The Prime Minister: This meeting of the Heads of Government was an informal meeting in preparation for the full European Council in Vienna, at which a broad range of issues were discussed. No formal decisions were taken.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cattle Carcases

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action has been taken by his Department to implement the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee recommendations that carcases from cattle aged over 30 months must be deboned in licensed plants supervised by the Meat Hygiene Service, with the trimmings to be classified as SBOs. [57001]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson) on 2 November 1998, Official Report, column 425.

Farmers' Retirement Schemes

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the operation of enhanced retirement schemes for farmers. [57295]

Mr. Rooker: Earlier this year the Government announced that they would not be introducing an early retirement scheme for farmers in the UK because of the limitations imposed by the current EU rules. The Commission has proposed changing these rules as part of its Agenda 2000 proposals and the Government will reconsider the possibility of introducing an early retirement scheme for farmers in the UK after any changes have been agreed.

Over-30-Months Scheme

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the OTM scheme will continue for passport-holding cattle when they reach the age of 30 months. [57296]

Mr. Rooker: Yes. Effective implementation of the Over-Thirty-Month rule is a precondition for the lifting of the EU ban on the export of UK beef. The Government have at present no plans to modify the rule but, as with all BSE control measures, it is being kept under review. Any decision to change the 30 months age limit will be taken in the light of progress with the eradication of BSE and of further advice from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many veterinarians have been recruited by the Meat Hygiene Service from outside the United Kingdom. [57721]

Mr. Rooker: The Meat Hygiene Service directly employs 14 Veterinary Surgeons from outside the United Kingdom. Of these, 10 are Citizens of other EU Member States and 4 are other Nationals.

The Meat Hygiene Service also contracts out Veterinary Services to Veterinary Agencies and Practices. 100 Citizens of other EU Member States and 4 other Nationals are employed in this way.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many veterinarians are employed by or contracted to the Meat Hygiene Service; and how many more will be necessary to comply with EU meat inspection directives. [57722]

Mr. Rooker: The Meat Hygiene Service directly employs 55 Veterinary Surgeons at present. Veterinary Agencies and Practices also currently supply the Meat Hygiene Service with veterinary services under contract with 521 (172 on a full time equivalent basis) Official Veterinary Surgeons under contract.

The precise number of additional veterinarians required to bring supervision levels at licensed premises in Great Britain into line with the requirements of the EU Directives will depend on several factors, including the number of premises to be supervised. However, based on trends in the industry, the Meat Hygiene Service has estimated that some 300 to 400 additional veterinarians may be required.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what prior notice he received of the arrest of Senator Pinochet of Chile. [57028]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 28 October 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was briefed shortly after the Metropolitan Police received the request from the Spanish authorities for the provisional arrest of Senator Pinochet.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when (a) he and (b) his officials were first informed that Senator Pinochet had entered the United Kingdom on his current visit. [57426]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was first informed on 16 October, when he was briefed about the Spanish authorities' request to the Metropolitan Police for the provisional arrest of Senator Pinochet. The Chilean Embassy formally confirmed to FCO officials on 9 October that Senator Pinochet was present in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements were made by his officials to receive Senator Pinochet when he arrived at Heathrow Airport for his current visit. [57425]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: At the request of the Chilean Embassy, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office arranged for Senator Pinochet to use the VIP lounge on his arrival at Heathrow Airport, but there was no official reception and no representative of the FCO was present when Senator Pinochet arrived.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those people who contacted him or his officials about the diplomatic status of Senator Pinochet prior to the senator's arrest. [57414]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Only officers of the Metropolitan Police contacted Foreign and Commonwealth officials about Senator Pinochet's diplomatic status prior to the Senator's arrest on 16 October.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs from whom and when he obtained advice on Senator Pinochet's entitlement to diplomatic immunity. [57969]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 2 November 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was told on the evening of 16 October of the advice on this subject that had been given by FCO officials to the Metropolitan Police.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department gave the Metropolitan Police on Senator Pinochet's entitlement to diplomatic immunity. [57968]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 2 November 1998]: This Department informed the Metropolitan Police that there were no grounds on the basis of immunity for not proceeding with the provisional arrest warrant.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to whom, apart from the Metropolitan Police, his Department gave advice on Senator Pinochet's diplomatic immunity. [57967]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: In addition to the advice on diplomatic immunity given to the Metropolitan Police before the arrest, this Department subsequently assisted the Home Office and their legal representatives in connection with the divisional court proceedings against my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

British Council

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the work of the British Council. [58094]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Council plays a practical and very effective role in enhancing Britain's image and prestige abroad and in promoting fruitful partnerships in a wide field of activities. The scope of its work is impressive and encompasses not only cultural matters but such important areas as student recruitment and the promotion of British goods and services in education and training and the creative industries. Without the practical support the British Council provides, a number of the Government's foreign policy objectives would be more difficult to achieve.

Laos

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department plans to make to the Laos Government following the meeting in his Department with Prince Savryavong Savang; and if he will make a statement. [57741]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK Ambassador in Bangkok is accredited to Laos and makes regular calls on the Lao government in Vientiane. He has raised our concerns about human rights and will continue to do so.

Convention on Conciliation and Arbitration

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the United Kingdom ratified the Convention on Conciliation and Arbitration of the OSCE. [58006]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom has not yet acceded to the OSCE Convention on Conciliation and Arbitration, but will keep the matter under review.

The Convention, which entered into force in December 1994, provides a mechanism for resolving disputes between states in the OSCE area. But in practice other dispute settlement mechanisms have been preferred, including the International Criminal Court of Justice. So far, no cases have been submitted for conciliation or arbitration under the Convention by any country.

Chile

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Chile calling on it to ensure the safety of all British scouts attending the World Jamboree of Scouts to be held in Chile in December. [58073]

Mr. Fatchett: Our Embassy in Santiago has repeatedly made it clear to the Chilean authorities that it is their responsibility to ensure the safety of all British nationals and British interests in the country. The Embassy will continue to do so as appropriate. The present advice against all non-essential travel to Chile stands.

Charter for Regional or Minority Languages

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government acceded to the Council of Europe Charter for Regional or Minority Languages; what assessment he has made of the implications of the Charter for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [57959]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have yet to accede to the Council of Europe Charter for Regional or Minority Languages but intend to do so, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), the Minister of State, informed the House on 4 June 1998, Official Report, column 350.

We propose to specify the Welsh language in Wales and the Gaelic language in Scotland under Part III of the Charter. We aim to specify the Irish language at an early date. Part II of the Charter will apply to the Scots language. We also propose to commission independent academic research which will help to determine whether Ulster-Scots should be treated as a language for the purposes of the Charter.

We are considering what aspects of the Charter should apply to the languages specified under Part III. At least 35 paragraphs or sub-paragraphs of the Charter must be identified and applied in such cases.

GCHQ

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the recruitment statistics for GCHQ for 1997 in line with the requirements of the Civil Service Commissioners; and how they compare with the figures for 1996. [58477]

Mr. Robin Cook: GCHQ notified the Commissioners that, in 1997, 236 recruits had joined or were in the pipeline. This compares with 228 staff recruited in 1996. In addition, five reappointments were made in 1997 compared with two in 1996.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance Recording Computer

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the cause of the problems with the NIRS2 computer system. [58261]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 3 November 1998]: The Contributions Agency (CA) has recently introduced a new National Insurance Recording computer system (NIRS2). The old NIRS1 system had to be replaced because it was aging and could not support future business and legislative changes, in particular those associated with the Pensions Act 1995.

The new system is designed to collect contributions, hold 65 million individual contribution records, calculate contributory benefits, provide data to many other Government Agencies, and pay age-related contribution rebates to Private Pension Providers. It is one of the biggest systems in Europe, with over fourteen million lines of computer software.

In April 1995 Andersen Consulting was awarded a contract, under the Private Finance Initiative (PFI), to replace NIRS1. The replacement system is the first major IT contract to be delivered under PFI. Under the terms of the PFI contract Andersen Consulting has borne all of its own costs in getting the system accepted and has not been paid for operating the new system until it was accepted. Payments for providing the new system did not commence until 13 July.

The original plan was to replace NIRS1 completely in February 1997. However, in March 1998 Anderson Consulting made a supplementary proposal to phase implementation, in order to reduce the technical and business risks. Therefore, the contract was varied, including financial compensation arrangements, to reflect this phased implementation between February 1997 and April 1999. This variation was documented in the National Audit Office report of May 1997. The contract letting and the phasing variation are fully covered in the 46th report of the Public Accounts Committee published on 17 September 1998.

Because of the scale, complexity and sensitivity of the NIRS2 system it has been thoroughly tested prior to acceptance by CA. During the first year of operation the system is being introduced through a series of pilots leading to national implementation.

Contingency plans were developed by both CA and Benefits Agency (BA) in order to accommodate the phased implementation and the attendant difficulties. These plans have been systematically updated to ensure minimum impact on contributors and benefit claimants.

In June 1998 data were transferred from the NIRS1 system to NIRS2. Andersen Consulting estimate that over four billion data items were successfully transferred before NIRS2 went live. Since then there have been some implementation problems; however, as I said in my letter of 11 September to Members of the House, no data have been lost and no records have been destroyed.

On 13 July 1998 the majority of the new system was switched on. After three weeks pilot several major business processes were implemented nationally. For example NIRS2 has read over 40 million items from end of year returns supplied by employers, posted over 14 million national insurance contributions for 1997–98, paid out over £630 million in age related rebates to holders of personal pensions and billed and/or collected £230 million in National Insurance contributions from the self employed. The CA is still piloting some key business processes.

On 14 September 1998 further parts of the system were switched on. Since then there has been a focus on piloting the links into the benefits systems. It is expected that the links to Jobseekers Allowance and Incapacity Benefit will start nationally in November. Andersen Consulting has submitted a plan that, subject to a satisfactory outcome from the current pilot exercise, enables the links to pensions and long term benefits to be available from December for implementation in early 1999. To reach this milestone problems identified during the pilot running of these functions critical to benefits must be cleared. These include the calculation of benefit entitlement for some cases; these are currently under investigation by Andersen Consulting.

As a result of the extended transition and pilot period there have been problems for some people making claims to Jobseekers Allowance, Incapacity Benefit, Retirement Pension and Widows Benefit.

Ninety five per cent. of new and repeat claims for JSA are being cleared using information from other DSS systems, from the claimant or by the award of an interim payment. An interim payment is made where the actual contribution position cannot be confirmed and an amount equal to the benefit rate is paid. The remaining 5 per cent. are currently being processed.

Ninety five per cent. of new claims for Incapacity Benefit are being cleared using information from other DSS systems, and the claimant. The 5 per cent. claims remaining are being processed or have been referred to Income Support. All interim payments and cases referred to Income Support will be reviewed when the NIRS2 system is fully implemented.

Most new Retirement Pension claims, an estimated 97 per cent. are being cleared using NIRS1 information. Because 1997–98 contributions are not being taken into account most claimants will be receiving initial awards. An initial award is a pension assessment based on the contribution information available at the time, in most cases the initial award of basic pension is likely to be correct or an underpayment of £1.25 a week. All initial awards will be reviewed as soon as the NIRS2 system is fully implemented and their 1997–98 contributions are posted. It is usual practice to make initial awards of benefit while waiting for additional contribution information. However, more cases than usual are being affected and claimants will have to wait longer before their retirement pension is finalised. In the remaining 3 per cent. of claims, where the Benefits Agency has no record of a claimant's contribution history, emergency payments equal to the basic pension rates can be made. All emergency payments will be reviewed when the contribution information is available.

Where there are unresolved issues relating to contracting out of State Earnings Related Pension Scheme (SERPS) some pensioners will be underpaid between a penny and a maximum of £100 a week. The Benefits Agency is undertaking clerical calculations in cases of hardship.

For Widows Benefit it is estimated about 10 per cent. of new claims are being cleared using information available to the Benefits Agency and the remaining 90 per cent. of new claims are being cleared by initial awards or emergency payments. All initial awards and emergency payments will be reviewed when NIRS2 information is available.

Where benefit payments are delayed as a result of the problems with NIRS2 payment of compensation will be automatically considered within the normal rules of the Department Special Payments Scheme. Where there has been an adverse effect as a result of the NIRS implementation on CA customers, compensation payments are being considered in line with normal procedures.

Considerable effort has been jointly made by DSS Agencies, private sector, pensions industry and Andersen Consulting to maintain service levels. All the work involved is being taken forward through a co-ordinated plan agreed between the DSS Agencies involved and Andersen Consulting. The key priority is to ensure that full normal operations can resume as soon as possible. It is expected that this will take until the end of this financial year. It will take longer to catch up on all backlogs. Within the plan, priority is being given to those aspects of the NIRS2 system, which most directly affect benefit claims. I shall keep the House informed of progress.

Departmental Toilets

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on access by the public to toilets in buildings under his departmental control. [56095]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 2 November 1998]: Members of the public, including those with disabilities, have access to toilets in most of the Department's buildings. Many buildings also provide access to baby changing facilities.

There are a number of buildings where there is no current provision. In some it may be possible to provide toilets as part of a programme of upgrade and improvement. In others the layout of the building may make it impossible to provide toilets adjacent to public caller areas.

Options for improving toilet facilities are being identified as part of the Department's programme of estate strategic planning.

Child Maintenance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many and what proportion of parents with care will receive less child maintenance under the formula for assessing maintenance proposed in the Green Paper on child maintenance than they do currently, broken down to show those receiving (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) disability working allowance, separately identifying those receiving none of these benefits; [55579]

(2) how many and what proportion of parents with care will receive less child maintenance under the formula proposed in the Green Paper on child support than they do currently, broken down into those now receiving (a) under £5, (b) £5-£9.99, (c) £10-£19.99, (d) £20-£29.99, (e) £30-£39.99, (f) £40-£49.99, (g) £50-£59.99, (h) £60-£69.99, (i) £70-£79.99, (j) £80-£89.99, (k) £90-£99.99 and (l) £100 and above per week. [55587]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 19 October 1998]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out.

This table does not include 170,000 parents with care receiving Income Support who will see an overall increase in their income because of the proposed £10 maintenance premium. We estimate also that the new simpler scheme will mean that at least an additional 200,000 parents with care receiving Income Support will be assessed to receive maintenance for the first time.

Information relating to parents with care with a lower maintenance assessment

Banded original maintenance assessment (£ per week)	Caseload	Proportion (per cent.)
Under 5.00	*	*
5.00–9.99	1,000	1
10.00–19.99	4,000	4
20.00–29.99	8,000	9
30.00–39.99	12,000	13

Information relating to parents with care with a lower maintenance assessment

Banded original maintenance assessment (£ per week)	Caseload	Proportion (per cent.)
40.00–49.99	16,000	18
50.00–59.99	16,000	18
60.00–69.99	13,000	15
70.00–79.99	9,000	10
80.00–89.99	6,000	7
90.00–99.99	2,000	3
100 and over	3,000	3
All cases	90,000	100

Notes:
1. Estimates are based on the 97–98 caseload and current benefit rules and do not take account of, for example, the introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit.
2. Caseloads are rounded to the nearest 1,000 and percentages to the nearest percentage point. Figures may not sum due to rounding.
3. * denotes caseload of less than 500 or proportion of less than half of 1 per cent.

Of the 90,000 cases shown in the table 50,000 are receiving Family Credit where the reduction in maintenance could be offset by an increase in benefit. In the remaining 40,000 the parent with care is not in receipt of either Income Support or Family Credit. The number of parents with care receiving Disability Working Allowance is negligible.

Also, the information in the table relates to assessed liability and not to the amounts of maintenance actually being paid. Cash compliance is currently around 66 per cent. but we estimate that this will increase to 80 per cent. or more under the new scheme. We are also proposing that reductions in maintenance should be phased in, so parents with care with a lower assessment will not necessarily find their maintenance reduced immediately to the new amount.

Child Support Agency

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people who are currently waiting for a face-to-face appointment with an official from the Child Support Agency to discuss their case in the West Midlands have been waiting for (a) one month, (b) two months, (c) three months and (d) six months and over; [57059]

(2) if he will make a statement about the current staffing levels at the CSA Dudley Office. [57060]

Angela Eagle: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide a consistent, fair and efficient service to all its clients. We have set out proposals for radical reform in our Green Paper "Children First: a new approach to child support" (Cm3992).

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Ms Joan Walley, dated 3 November 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about face to face appointments and staffing levels in the Child Support Agency.

The Agency is divided into six front-line Business Units; a Business Unit consists of a Child Support Agency Centre and associated field offices. Information has been provided for the Midlands Business Unit.

As part of our ongoing commitment to improve significantly the quality of service to our customers, the Agency offers local interviews to both non-resident parents and parents with care. Where a customer requests an interview, and the query cannot be resolved by contacting them by telephone an interview will be arranged.

I am quite convinced of the need for much increased face to face contact to make our service more responsive to the needs of our customers. By increasing face to face contact we will provide customers with better explanations and improve their compliance and co-operation. Additionally, increased face to face contact should reduce the incidence of fraud.

We are in the process of changing our organisational structure, and we aim to offer significantly more face to face contact. It is our intention that more interviews will be offered, to more people, at more stages of the process and at more locations. A two month face to face trial has recently commenced involving 17 field offices nationwide with 65 staff dedicated to providing this face to face service.

The Agency's field offices deal with cases where a local interview is requested either by the parent with care or the non-resident parent. Additionally, field offices deal with cases where the Agency instigates a request for an interview; for example when:

a Reduced Benefit Direction is being considered paternity is disputed the Child Support Officer decides that an interview is the best way to progress a case

Information held on interviews does not differentiate between those requested by customers and those instigated by the Agency. However at 30 September 1998 Midlands Business Unit had approximately 400 interviews waiting to be carried out; in 1997–98 the average number of interviews carried out each month was 489. Information on the number of people currently waiting for an interview is not available, however early results from the face to face trial show that approximately 70 per cent. of interviews are carried out within 6 days of a request being received.

At 30 September 1998 the Midlands Business Unit's staffing level (whole time equivalent) was 1,220.6; this consists of 812.0 for the Dudley Centre and 408.6 for the associated field offices.

As part of our reorganisation we are transferring paper processing work from the field to the centres. Consequently the number of staff in the field network will reduce significantly over the next three to four years. However, we will be looking to increase the number of locations where we will carry out interviews; using facilities outside DSS. Field resources will then be focused specifically on improved face to face contact with customers. We expect the availability and amount of local face to face contact to increase significantly over the next year as a result. This is originally the area on which field staff were intended to concentrate at the start of the Agency; paper processing work was undertaken only as a short-term measure to help the Agency deal with the number of applications it received in the early years.

I hope this is helpful.

WALES

New Deal

7. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many companies in (a) Clwyd, South and (b) Wales have signed up to the New Deal. [56583]

Mr. Hain: Well over 2,000 firms have signed agreements to offer more than 3,800 jobs in Wales. In the North-East Wales District which includes the constituency of Clwyd, South, more than 200 employers are involved, with over 120 jobs offered to date.

National Tree Week

8. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives his Department is taking to participate in National Tree Week. [56584]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: We do, of course, support tree planting every week of the year, and we are fully committed to increasing the woodland area in Wales. National Tree Week is an excellent initiative and the Forestry Commission will be participating in several planting projects, often enlisting the help of school children.

European Structural Funds

9. Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress in securing European structural funds support for Wales. [56585]

Mr. Michael: The Office for National Statistics published on 22 October GDP figures for the areas in Wales known by the Eurostat classification NUTS 2. The figures indicate that the West Wales and the Valleys NUTS 2 area should meet the criterion for Objective 1 as currently proposed by the Commission.

Public Health Action Plan

11. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the public health action plan for Wales. [56587]

12. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the public health action plan for Wales. [56588]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Better Health Better Wales—Strategic Framework was launched on 23 October and sets out the next steps to be taken to develop a medium to long term strategy to improve the health of the population of Wales. It focuses on improving the health and well being of people in Wales through strategies which promote and protect health and reduce inequalities in health through the encouragement of sustainable communities, a healthy lifestyle, and a better environment.

Secretary of State (Accountability)

13. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of the future Welsh Assembly on his accountability to hon. Members. [56589]

Mr. Michael: The establishment of the National Assembly for Wales will alter the range of issues for which the Secretary of State for Wales is responsible but he will remain accountable to Parliament for those functions which he retains, notably the promotion of primary legislation. The Government intend to submit evidence to the Procedure Committee of the House of Commons for its inquiry into the procedural consequences of devolution shortly.

Agriculture

14. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the state of Welsh agriculture. [56590]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The current problems in farming bring into sharp focus the need for Welsh agriculture to adapt. Our aim is to create a viable future for agriculture and encourage economic growth in rural Wales.

18. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the (a) economic and (b) social effect of the current crisis in Welsh agriculture. [56594]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Welsh Office are currently preparing forecasts for hill farming incomes in 1997–98 as part of the annual review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands. It is intended that this information will be made available in a press notice shortly.

An assessment of incomes for those not farming in the hills will be made during the next two months and will be published in the New Year.

I recognise the importance of agriculture to rural Wales. Agriculture is estimated to contribute directly about 8 per cent. to total employment in the less favoured areas (LFA). Agriculture also indirectly supports jobs in other industries; and published studies suggest that in the LFA every 10 full-time jobs in agriculture support approximately a further 4 jobs in related industries.

Farmers' Assistance

15. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which requests for assistance from the National Farmers Union in Wales he is currently considering for implementation. [56591]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I have had a number of meetings with the farming unions in Wales including the NFU. I am engaged in a constructive dialogue with the farmers' leaders and the industry about developing long term strategies for Welsh agriculture so that it can meet the demands of the twenty first century.

Commission for Local Administration

16. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the recent report from the Commission for Local Administration in Wales into a planning matter involving Caerphilly borough council; and if he will make a statement. [56592]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I am well aware of the problems highlighted by the Ombudsman's report.

The White Paper on modernising local government in Wales, which we published in July, announced the Government's intention to introduce a new ethical framework for local councils. This will include clearer codes of conduct for elected members and a far tougher regime in the event that codes are breached. The new arrangements will make it far harder for councillors to claim ignorance of the requirements placed upon them.

Rural Partnership

17. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress is being made in developing the rural partnership for Wales. [56593]

Mr. Hain: The inaugural meeting of the Rural Partnership for Wales will be held on 12 November at the University of Wales, Aberystwyth.

Its membership, which comprises 26 organisations, will bring together a wide range of interests and expertise and be a valuable source of ideas for tackling the many diverse issues affecting rural Wales.

Referendums (Funding)

19. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence his Department supplied to the Neill committee in respect of funding for referendums. [56595]

Mr. Michael: I refer the hon. Member to pages 347–357 of volume 2 of the Fifth Report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life (Neill Report) which contains the full transcript of the oral evidence provided by Welsh Office officials. A copy of the written evidence provided by the Welsh Office is at section 16/404 on the CD-ROM accompanying volume 2.

Farming Incomes

20. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about farming incomes in Wales. [56596]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Welsh Office are currently preparing income forecasts for hill farming incomes in 1997–98 as part of the annual review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands. It is intended that this information will be made available in a press notice shortly.

An assessment of incomes for those not farming in the hills will be made during the next two months and will be published in the New Year.

Job Losses (Swansea Valley)

21. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the number of job losses in the Swansea valley over the last six months. [56597]

Mr. Hain: Some job losses are an inevitable part of the environment in a dynamic economy. However, it is important that jobs which are lost are replaced by new ones. Overall, employment in Wales is continuing to rise.

In the Swansea travel to work area, manufacturing industry has suffered a net loss of 582 jobs since the beginning of the year. This does not include the 500 new jobs which I recently announced will be created by International Rectifier with the establishment of their manufacturing plant at Penllergaer, Swansea.

Health Professionals

22. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the pay and conditions of health professionals in Wales. [56599]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I have received numerous representations on the pay and conditions of service particularly of nurses. The Pay Review Bodies are currently taking evidence on the pay of NHS staff within their remit and their recommendations will be announced in the New Year. The Government are also considering a revised approach to pay and conditions of service for all NHS staff.

NHS Trusts

23. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the representations made to him about the reorganisation of NHS trusts in Wales. [56600]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Public consultation on the proposals to reconfigure NHS trusts in Wales ended on 21 September. The comments received are now being taken into account in arriving at decisions which will be announced in due course. A summary of all representations received together with the Reconfiguration Project Teams' and Consultants' independent reports will be placed in the Library of the House when an announcement is made.

New Millennium Experience Company

24. Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chief executive of the New Millennium Experience Company to discuss investment by that company in Wales. [56601]

Mr. Hain: Welsh Office officials meet with NMEC officials regularly to discuss progress over the Millennium Experience in Wales. I will be launching NMEC's Learning Experience in Wales on 20 November. I am pleased that NMEC has established an office in Wales.

LG Semicon

25. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the future of the LG Semicon plant at Newport. [56602]

Mr. Hain: The semiconductor plant is an important part of the overall LG project at Newport, which currently employs some 1,700 people. We understand that LG Semicon is considering a number of options for the future of the semiconductor plant, in the light of current economic circumstances and commercial discussions.

Health Services (West Wales)

26. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the restructuring of health services in west Wales. [56603]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Public consultation on the proposals to reconfigure NHS trusts in Wales ended on 21 September. The comments received are now being taken into account in arriving at decisions which will be announced in due course. A summary of all representations received together with the Reconfiguration Project Teams' and Consultants' independent reports will be placed in the Library of the House when an announcement is made.

Welsh Assembly (Child Care)

27. Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the provision of child care facilities in the National Assembly of Wales building. [56604]

Mr. Michael: We have received a small number of representations, and in response to the National Assembly Advisory Group's recommendations, my officials are considering the options for providing childcare for the Members and staff of the Assembly.

In addition, a feasibility study will be carried out, once the Assembly is in session, on the options for providing childcare facilities for visitors to the Assembly, along the lines of a drop-in crèche.

Waiting Lists

28. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the number of people on the waiting list for elective surgery for more than six months in health authorities in Wales. [56605]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Central data are only available for residents waiting over 12 months; the latest available figures show that at August '98 there were 9,274 residents waiting over 12 months for inpatient/day case surgery.

Coalfields Task Force

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that the proposals contained in the coalfields task force report will apply to Wales. [56586]

Mr. Hain: We shall be considering, where appropriate, the application of the recommendations to Wales as part of the work of the New Partnership for the Valleys.

Teacher Shortages

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the level of (a) current and (b) predicted teacher shortages for the next five years in the (i) primary and (ii) secondary sectors in Wales. [56574]

Mr. Hain: Assessments of the demand and supply of teachers are made on an England and Wales basis only. The model used for this assessment does not predict future teacher shortages. Latest data on vacant teacher posts in Wales show that, as at 13 January 1998, there were 105 vacancies for full-time appointments, or appointments of at least one term's duration, in nursery and primary schools and 60 vacancies in secondary schools.

GDP Statistics

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects an announcement from the Office for National Statistics on GDP levels in the NUTS II areas of Wales. [56581]

Mr. Michael: The Office for National Statistics published on 22 October GDP figures for the areas in Wales known by the Eurostat classification NUTS 2. The figures indicate that the West Wales and the Valleys NUTS 2 area should meet the criterion for Objective 1 as currently proposed by the Commission.

TREASURY

Agriculture (Public Expenditure)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total public expenditure, in current prices, on agriculture in the United Kingdom for each year from 1975 to date; and what are the planned totals, in current prices, for each year covered by the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review. [57501]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 2 November 1998]: The historical figures for public expenditure on agriculture in the UK can be obtained from "Agriculture in the UK" publications, and the GDP deflator series from the Treasury's deflator table (available in the House of Commons Library). The latest estimate for 1998–99 UK expenditure is £3,466 million. The UK totals for the years 1999–2000 to 2001–02 have not yet been finalised.

Agrimonetary Compensation

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to Her Majesty's Government of claiming all the agrimonetary compensation to which British farmers were entitled in the current financial year. [57920]

Mr. Byers: The cost to the Exchequer of making use of all agrimonetary compensation would have been £818.5 million.

Care Packages (VAT)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated additional annual revenue yield following the ruling by Customs and Excise that VAT applies to household chores or errands if they are more than an incidental part of a package of care. [57773]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 November 1998]: Negligible. Customs are now reviewing their policy on charity welfare services and consulting interested parties to agree the circumstances in which household chores or errands will be exempt from VAT.

Saving (Children)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce an equivalent to the former national savings stamps to encourage saving by children. [58256]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 November 1998]: No. National Savings stamps were abolished many years ago following a recommendation from the Committee to Review National Savings (the Page Committee) in June 1973. The stamps were found to be an ineffective way of encouraging small savings. They were also expensive to administer. Re-introduction of stamps or an equivalent scheme is likely to do little to encourage savings and would be costly to the taxpayer. There are many savings schemes designed for children's savings from banks and building societies, and National Savings' Ordinary and Investment accounts and Children's Bonus Bonds are also popular for children's savings. Unlike stamps these offer interest.

Expenditure (Scotland)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a more detailed breakdown of the components of expenditure under Scotland, other identifiable expenditure, as shown in table 7.7 General Government Expenditure in the Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses for 1995–96 and 1996–97; if he will make a statement on the changes between the two years; and if he will provide a corresponding breakdown of other identifiable expenditure, Scotland, for 1997–98. [57578]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 3 November 1998]: The following table shows a breakdown of identifiable general government expenditure in Scotland, other than that by Scottish departments, by broad function and by spending department, for 1995–96 and 1996–97.

£ million

Expenditure by department	1995–96	1996–97
Agriculture, fisheries, food and forestry	2	130
The Intervention Board	2	74
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries & Food	—	56
Trade, industry, energy, employment and training	145	290
Department for Education and Employment (inc. OFSTED)	111	121
Department of Trade and Industry	33	159
Department for Culture, Media and Sport	—	7
Office of Telecommunications	—	less than 1
Office of Gas Supply	—	less than 1
Office of Electricity Regulation	less than 1	less than 1
Registry of Friendly Societies	less than 1	less than 1
Transport	—	161
Office of Passenger Rail Franchising	—	156
Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions	—	5
Office of the Rail Regulator	—	less than 1
Other environmental services	—	27
Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions	—	27
Law, order and protective services	47	72
Crown Office	47	48
Home Office	—	24
Culture, media and sport	—	7
Department for Culture, Media and Sport	—	7
Office of the National Lottery	—	less than 1
Social Security	8,608	9,142
Department of Social Security	8,608	9,142

The figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97 are not comparable in many cases, due to changes in the approach used to collect the data. The coverage of the 1996–97 exercise for apportioning spending by country was wider, with a significantly lower proportion of total expenditure not being allocated. Where departments did not have precise accounting information, they were asked to use appropriate indicators to arrive at an estimate. (For example, allocation of administration costs in the same proportions as the corresponding programme expenditure).

Figures for identifiable general government expenditure in 1997–98 will be published in the next edition of Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses (PESA), in March or April 1999.

Farmers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to public funds of allowing a one-off facility for UK farmers to average their profits for income tax purposes over the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [57947]

Dawn Primarolo: Currently farmers whose profits fluctuate by more than 25 per cent. can average their farming profits of two consecutive years and attribute half the total to each year. The resulting average profits can themselves be subject to averaging with later years. Together with the various provisions allowing any trading losses to be set against the profits of earlier or later years, this already gives farmers scope to smooth their profits over several years. The additional cost of allowing a one-off averaging over the last five years is difficult to estimate.

It would be extremely complicated for farmers to prepare, and the Inland Revenue to administer, five year claims, and it would not be possible to focus such a relief on particular sectors of farming.

The Government are very aware of the difficulties which farmers are facing as a result of the sharp decline in farm incomes. This is why the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is in close touch with leaders of the farming industry to discuss what can be done to help the industry through this difficult time.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judge Michael Kershaw

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many judgments are outstanding in cases heard before Judge Michael Kershaw (a) 18 months, (b) 12 months and (c) nine months ago. [57288]

Mr. Hoon: None.

HEALTH

Gulf War

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the plans by the World Health Organisation to conduct a study of the health and environmental effects of the use of depleted uranium projectiles in Iraq during the Gulf War; and what assistance it has requested from Her Majesty's Government. [57106]

Ms Jowell: We understand the World Health Organisation is considering, with the Iraqi Ministry of Health, deploying a small team to carry out preliminary studies into the incidence rather than the cause of cancer in Iraq and to advise on further action. We have not carried out an assessment of these plans, nor have we been asked to provide assistance.

Anti-smoking Campaigns (EU Funding)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's policy on European Union funding for campaigns to discourage smoking. [57181]

Ms Jowell: The Health Council has called for co-ordinated action to be taken by the Member States and at Community level to encourage the reduction of smoking. It has welcomed and is monitoring progress by the Commission in taking forward action proposed in its Communication of December 1996 on tobacco control. The Council and the European Parliament adopted in 1996 a five year action programme against cancer which includes specific actions to disseminate the best methods of overcoming addiction to smoking. We wholeheartedly support these activities.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Vaccines

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the findings contained in the paper by Robert E. Weibel and others published in Paediatrics March 1998 on the links between acute encephalopathy associated with attenuated measles vaccines. [56968]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The paper by Weibel et al describes a group of children with neurological events following measles vaccines. All those cases included were selected through earlier application to the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Programme in the United States. We are advised by the Joint Committees on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI) that the information in the paper is not evidence that the vaccines caused the claimed outcomes, and is simply a descriptive study without appropriate control populations or avoidance of bias implicit in the case selection process. The JCVI is an independent expert committee which advises the United Kingdom health departments on matters concerning immunisation.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what quantities (a) myelin basic protein and (b) aluminium occurred in pre-1992 measles and MMR vaccine. [56963]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The Department has been advised by the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control that the techniques involved in the manufacture of measles, mumps and rubella (MMR) vaccine have been specifically designed to prevent myelin basic protein from entering at the start of the manufacture and, if there were any, then such presence would subsequently be removed during the manufacture. No aluminium is involved in the manufacture of measles or MMR vaccines.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what brands of MMR vaccine were withdrawn from use in September 1992; and what notice was given to other manufacturers about this withdrawal. [56964]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The supply of Pluserix and Immravax measles, mumps and rubella vaccines, two vaccines which contained Urabe strain mumps vaccines, was discontinued in September 1992. As soon as the Department had clear evidence that there was a significant problem with Urabe mumps vaccines, not occurring with the remaining brand, MMR II which contained Jeryl Lynn mumps vaccine, the Department moved quickly to discontinue purchase of the two Urabe strain vaccines. The manufacturers of the MMR II vaccine were advised in September 1992 of the Department's requirements for more vaccine to prevent disruption to the childhood programme.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which medical officer approved the Pluserix and Immuruvax brands of MMR vaccine. [56966]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The decision to grant a licence for any medicinal product is taken by the licensing authority in the light of reports prepared by professional medical, pharmaceutical and scientific staff at the Medicines Control Agency, together with advice from the Committee on Safety of Medicines where appropriate.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each of the years since 1969 in which vaccinations or revised vaccinations were introduced for mumps, measles or rubella. [56973]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 October 1998]: Measles immunisation was introduced in 1968; rubella immunisation was introduced in 1970 for girls aged 11–14 years; mumps was introduced as part of the Measles Mumps and Rubella (MMR) vaccine in 1988 and a second dose of MMR was introduced in 1996.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Priorix contains the same ingredients, and in the same quantities, as MMR vaccine. [56977]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 October 1998]: Priorix is a measles, mumps and rubella vaccine. The Summary of Product Characteristics contains details of the contents of Priorix, copies of which are in the Library.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doses were in standard batches of (a) attenuated measles vaccine and (b) MMR in the period 1986 to 1989. [56978]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 October 1998]: Batches of vaccine vary in the number of doses they contain. Specific information on the number of doses per batch is held by the vaccine manufacturers.

Autism

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the findings contained in the paper by Gina Delgiudice-Asch MD and Eric Hollander MD published in CNS Spectrums May 1997 on a review of clinical observations with respect to the possible auto-immune basis of autism, a copy of which has been sent to him. [56970]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The Department is not aware of the status of the publication CNS Spectrums, or of how the articles are peer reviewed before publication.

Delgiudice-Asch and Hollander describe a number of immunological theories about autism, many of which, as the authors report, are either inconclusive or contradictory.

Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation in the years (a) 1987, (b) 1988 and (c) 1989. [56965]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The membership of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation is given each year in the Health and Social Services Yearbook, copies of which are in the Library.

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives his Department is currently supporting to reduce the level of alcohol consumption by those aged under 16 years. [57886]

Ms Jowell: The Health Education Authority published "A Parent's Guide to Drugs and Alcohol" in June this year. It includes guidance on talking about drugs and alcohol with children of various ages and life stages from primary school age to young people over 16. It also includes basic facts about a range of illegal drugs, gases, glues, aerosols and alcohol.

The Healthy Schools Initiative, a key component of the public health strategy outlined in the Green Paper "Our Healthier Nation", was launched on 14 May this year. The Initiative aims to build on the concept of the healthy school not just to promote excellence in educational achievement but to foster emotional wellbeing and enable young people to improve their quality of life and that of the wide community.

Under the initiative, we are funding eight "Health Education Partnerships" pilot schemes. These will include the development of an informed approach to substance misuse including alcohol and smoking.

A Ministerial Group on Alcopops has been set up to tackle under-age alcohol misuse, its short and long term effects on health, and unacceptable behaviour of our young people in a co-ordinated and effective manner. The Department and other Government departments are represented on the group.

BSE

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's responsibility for BSE compensation. [57341]

Ms Jowell: The responsibility for compensation in relating to Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy rests with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

On the question of the payment of compensation for people who die from new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease the policy of successive Governments has been that questions of negligence are best decided by the Courts and that, other than in cases where negligence is proven, a compensation scheme would not be appropriate.

Nursing Agencies

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the NHS spent with nursing agencies in 1997 or the latest year for which figures are available. [58028]

Mr. Milburn: The latest available figures show that in 1996–97 the total national cost for employing agency nurses was £191.3 million.

Health Visitors

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role for (a) health visitors and (b) school nurses in delivering the objectives set out in the White Paper "The new NHS: Modern, Dependable". [58258]

Mr. Milburn: The White Paper's objectives provide for improved public health through an integrated system of care based on partnership and driven by performance. Health visitors and school nurses will play an important role in both developing primary and community health care and in delivering these objectives.

Crohn's Disease

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to fund research into the possible connection between the consumption of milk and Crohn's Disease; and if he will make a statement. [57671]

Ms Jowell: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is funding a study of the microbiological quality of raw and pasteurised cows' milk. This study will include examination of samples for the presence of Mycobacterium paratuberculosis which has been suggested as a possible factor in the aetiology of Crohn's disease. The Medical Research Council recently agreed to set up an expert sub-group to steer and monitor the Council's research into various aspects of inflammatory bowel diseases, including Crohn's disease.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of Crohn's Disease have been registered during each of the past five years, indicating the age distribution of such cases. [57672]

Ms Jowell: There are no national figures on the incidence of Crohn's disease in the United Kingdom; however, data obtained for 20 centres throughout Europe in 1991–1993 indicate that the incidence of Crohn's disease (the rate at which people are diagnosed annually) is approximately 5 per 100,000 of population.

The number affected at any one time in the UK is about 50 per 100,000 (British Society of Gastroenterology, September 1996).

Crohn's disease occurs in all age groups although most commonly in young adults.

Community Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact on community care services of including Special Transitional Grant in the revenue support grant settlement. [57776]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 3 November 1998]: In every year since 1996, the amount of the previous year's special transitional grant has been fully taken into account in the calculation of the revenue support grant settlement. The impact of the settlement on community care services depends on spending decisions by local councils.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Millennium Exhibition

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest estimate for the price of entry tickets to the Millennium Exhibition in Greenwich for (a) adults, (b) children, (c) families, (d) people with disabilities and (e) pensioners. [57211]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 29 October 1998]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) will announce the price range for tickets to the Millennium Experience at Greenwich in due course. The NMEC will ensure that prices are set at a level which will encourage as many people as possible from across the UK and abroad who wish to visit the Millenniuin Experience to do so. The prices will offer good value for money compared to other major attractions; whilst maximising income for the Company. There will be discounted rates for children, students, families, senior citizens and groups.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (a) those companies, organisations and individuals which have so far committed sponsorship to the Millennium Exhibition at Greenwich, (b) the projects or zones to which their sponsorship is committed and (c) the amount of sponsorship still to be committed to each zone. [57213]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 29 October 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 27 October 1998, Official Report, columns 129–30.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ensure that the Millennium Dome incorporates an area devoted to the contribution to philosophy and politics made by John Locke. [57768]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) aims to reflect the great wealth of British tradition which exists across many disciplines including philosophy and politics. However, it is not feasible for the contribution of every eminent individual in these fields to be reflected.

Fairness at Work

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what studies he has carried out into the compliance cost to businesses of the proposals in the Fairness at Work White Paper. [54669]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The White Paper on Fairness at Work proposes a balanced framework of workable and practical measures with the objective of supporting a new culture of partnership at work which will contribute to national prosperity. A regulatory impact assessment, considering costs and benefits, will be published when legislation is brought before Parliament.

Planning Consents

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning demands for payments by freeholders for retrospective consents relating to planning applications; what plans he has to investigate such cases; and if he will make a statement. [57942]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 4 November 1998]: None.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure (a) the Working Time Directive is implemented in full by employers and (b) employees are informed about their entitlement under the Working Time Directive. [57719]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 4 November 1998]: The Regulations implementing the Working Time Directive provide a number of rights, some of which are enforced by the health and safety enforcing authorities (the Health and Safety Executive) and Local Authority Environmental Health Officers, who will investigate any alleged breach of the measures, and others will be enforced by workers bringing complaints to Employment Tribunals.

The Department has run a public awareness campaign in the national press and made guidance material on the new legislation available through a number of public outlets (Libraries, Citizens Advice Bureaux etc).

Medical Research Council

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce measures to require the Medical Research Council to allocate a proportion of its funds to projects specifically designed to improve women's health. [58115]

Mr. Battle: The MRC has a broad national remit which must cover all areas of research relating to human health. The Government's relationship with the MRC is governed by the Haldane Principle whereby the Council is responsible for determining research priorities.

Research relevant specifically to women's health forms an important part of the MRC's portfolio, with around £47 million committed to research relevant to all areas of women's health, including reproductive health and other conditions such as breast cancer, ovarian cancer and osteoporosis.

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the amount spent by the MRC on commissioning research on pregnancy-related issues in each of the last five years; [58165]

(2) if he will list the projects funded by the Medical Research Council undertaking research on (a) pregnancy and (b) obstetrics for each of the last five years. [58116]

Mr. Battle: The MRC supports a significant portfolio of research into reproductive health, covering pregnancy and obstetrics, and also closely relevant areas such as infertility/fertilisation and conditions of the cervix. There are currently about 20 studies at the MRC's own research establishments, principally the MRC Reproductive Biology Unit, and also the MRC Dunn Nutrition Unit (including the Dunn Nutrition Group in The Gambia), the MRC Human Biochemical Genetics Unit, the MRC Medical Sociology Unit, the MRC Laboratories in The Gambia and the MRC Molecular Haematology Unit. The MRC also supports some 50 studies through grants to universities, including 6 major Programmes and 9 clinical trials. The total value of this research (both establishments and grants) is estimated at £4.8 million in 1996–97 and £5.3 million in 1997–98.

The above research excludes a further body of related work covering embryology and foetal development, for which the MRC currently supports 10 studies in its own establishments and 60 studies in universities.

Details of current projects have been placed in the Library of the House. Information on previous projects is not available.

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the criteria by which the Medical Research Council decides its priorities for funding projects. [58114]

Mr. Battle: All research proposals received by the MRC are evaluated using the same fundamental criteria:

scientific quality of the proposals;

significance and importance of the research topics;

proposals' contribution to the published scientific strategy of the MRC and the Department of Health (and, where appropriate, that of other Government Departments such as DFID); value-for-money.

The claims for resources of particular proposals in one field are assessed against those of proposals in others, on a competitive basis.

Competitiveness

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the White Paper on Competitiveness. [57067]

Mr. Mandelson: I intend to publish the White Paper on Competitiveness in December.

Genetic Testing (Insurance)

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Government plan to publish their response to the Human Genetics Advisory Commission's report on the Implications of Genetic Testing for Insurance. [58945]

Mr. Mandelson: My noble Friend the Minister for Science today published, in conjunction with the Minister for Public Health, the Government's response to the HGAC report. In undertaking consideration of this issue, the Government have placed great importance on ensuring fairness of treatment for people seeking insurance cover. The response sets out a number of proposals which seek to build on the progress already made by the Association of British Insurers in developing industry-wide standards on underwriting and confidentiality. In line with the recommendations made in the HGAC report, the proposals include the establishment of an independent mechanism to evaluate the scientific and actuarial relevance of any genetic tests before they can be taken into account by insurers. Copies of the response have been placed in the Library.

Chile

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of his remarks concerning the arrest of Senator Pinochet on behalf of the Spanish legal authorities on trade between Chile and the United Kingdom. [56571]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 28 October 1998]: The United Kingdom has well established trade links with Chile and I expect those to continue. We are one of Chile's main export markets. Although there has been a modest downturn in bilateral trade during the year to August, Chile still enjoys a substantial balance of trade. UK companies remain amongst the biggest group of foreign investors in Chile.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those Ministers with whom he has discussed the arrest of Senator Pinochet and the dates on which the discussions took place. [57430]

Mr. Mandelson: It is the normal convention under this and previous Governments that discussions which take place between Ministers are not routinely disclosed. On this occasion, however, it has been made public that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made it clear to the Cabinet on 22 October that there should be no discussion at Cabinet given that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary might in due course have to address the issue in a quasi-judicial role.

Start-up Grants

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies have re-paid start-up grants in the last five years. [58118]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 3 November 1998]: Fifteen.

Siemens

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 22 October 1998, Official Report column 1174, when the payments of regional selective assistance were made to Siemens; and to what purposes the sums offered but not allocated were transferred. [58120]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 3 November 1998]: Payments of RSA to Siemens were made in March 1996 and March 1998.

The offer of grant to Siemens was reduced by £5 million in March 1998. This saving was returned to the central budget along with a number of other changes. A payment of £3 million, due in 1998/99, remains within the RSA budget at present. Final allocations for the Department's 1999/2000 budgets, when the final £4 million was due to be paid to the company, have not yet been made. This sum has not, therefore, been specifically allocated elsewhere.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Cricket

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact on cricket in Wales of the decision by the England and Wales Cricket Board to grant live television coverage rights to Channel 4. [56598]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 4 November 1998]: S4C has recently announced that it will transmit a substantial proportion of Channel 4's live Test match coverage of Wales, subject to other scheduling demands. Channel 4 has announced plans for substantial investment in the promotion and development of cricket over the next four years. Cricket in Wales will benefit from this additional funding and from the continued exposure of a good proportion of the sport's flagship events to wide television audiences.

Creative Industries

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what quantitative assessment of the benefits which accrue from the investments in the development of the individual's imaginative and creative capacity the Government and Governmental agencies currently make. [57766]

Janet Anderson: The creativity and imagination of the British people are among our greatest strengths, shaping our culture and our position in the world. We will tomorrow be publishing an analysis of the economic benefits of our creative industries. These sectors, which we define as those which have their origin in the talent, skill and imagination of an individual and rely on the generation and exploitation of intellectual property for job and wealth creation, turn over nearly £60 billion a year and employ 1½ million people. They also constitute the fastest growing section of the national economy, earning us £8 billion in exports.

Public Appointments

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list by name and stated political affiliation those persons appointed to non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department since 1 May 1997. [57306]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 29 October 1998]: My Department does not collect details on the political affiliation of those appointed to public bodies. However, information on political activity is collected and published at the time of appointment in line with guidance issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

This information is noted in a table which has been placed in the Library and which includes all appointments which fall under my responsibility or where my role is to advise my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and, through him, Her Majesty the Queen.

PRIME MINISTER

Falkland Islands

Mr. Howard: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the nature of his discussions with President Menem of Argentina with particular reference to the latter's statement that negotiations over the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands will start within three years. [58418]

The Prime Minister: I met President Menem on 29 October. We had an extensive discussion of various issues including bilateral relations, the global financial crisis, Mercosur and the future of Europe. I welcomed President Menem's public renunciation of the use of force against the Falklands, and raised our concerns over the proposed Argentine oil and fish legislation. President Menem reiterated Argentina's view on the Falklands. In turn I made it clear that the United Kingdom does not regard the sovereignty of the Falklands as negotiable. As we have repeatedly said, there will be no change in the status of the Islands unless that is the wish of the Islanders themselves.

DEFENCE

Reigate TA Centre

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the likely receipts arising from the sale of the Reigate TA Centre. [57583]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It is not our practice to make public information on the market value of individual TA Centres (under Section 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information) as it would prejudice my Department's position in any sales negotiation.

Defence Diversification

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he proposes to publish a White Paper on Defence Diversification. [58476]

Mr. George Robertson: We have today published our White Paper "Defence Diversification: Getting the most out of defence technology", as Cm 4088. It describes how we intend to create a defence diversification agency, in fulfilment of our election manifesto. It follows the process of consultation set in motion earlier this year by our Green Paper, Cm 3861. We are most grateful to all those organisations and individuals who contributed to this process.

WALES

Playgroups

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how he proposes further to assist pre-school playgroups; and if he will make a statement; [57440]

(2) how many registered accredited playgroups there are by county; and if he will make a statement. [57441]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The number of registered playgroups in each local authority area in Wales as at 31 March 1998 was:

Local authority area	Number
Blaenau Gwent	14
Bridgend	53
Caerphilly	45
Cardiff	141
Carmarthenshire	80
Ceredigion	48
Conwy	58
Denbighshire	51
Flintshire	63
Gwynedd	62
Isle of Anglesey	57
Merthyr Tydfil	14
Monmouthshire	38
Neath Port Talbot	19
Newport	46
Pembrokeshire	58
Powys	87
Rhondda, Cynon, Taff	73
Swansea	37
The Vale of Glamorgan	59
Torfaen	44
Wrexham	76
Total	1,223

Voluntary playgroups do very valuable work with young children in the years leading up to compulsory school age. Our aim is that the playgroup movement should continue to play a key role in the education and care of this age group. We have made £50,000 available this year in Wales through the Wales Pre-school Playgroups Association and Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin to help ensure the survival of good playgroups under threat of closure. Funding is also available to the new partnerships planning early years education and childcare to develop childcare to complement early years education provision. We hope playgroups will take a full part in these new developments.

Funding decisions for next year are dependent on the outcome of the consultation on the Comprehensive Spending Review. Those decisions will be announced in due course.

Floods

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish an independent inquiry into the South Wales floods between 21 and 28 October. [57904]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Environment Agency has kept me and my right hon. Friend informed of the effects of the very heavy rainfall on flooding in Wales. I have great sympathy for those who have been adversely affected by the flooding, but I am not aware of circumstances that would warrant an independent inquiry.

Hill Farmers

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the income for hill farmers in Wales as (a) a total and (b) an average per farmer in 1997–98; and what are the predictions for income in the current financial year. [58014]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Estimates of hill farm incomes will be published by the department on November 30, with accompanying statistical tables placed in the library of the House.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Sudan

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what initiatives she is assessing to aid relief efforts in Southern Sudan. [57795]

Clare Short: Since the current crisis in Southern Sudan began last February we have committed over £28 million bilaterally to provide humanitarian relief to the most vulnerable areas. We are working with Operation Lifeline Sudan and its partners to improve the efficiency, effectiveness and impartiality of the relief operation. But a just peace in Sudan is the only long term solution to the problems in the south. We continue to work with Inter governmental Authority on Development and urge all parties to the fighting to agree an immediate full cease-fire and to approach peace talks in a positive and constructive manner.

Debt Relief

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the progress of debt relief for post-conflict countries. [58186]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

At the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' Meeting in Ottawa, the Chancellor stated his commitment to assisting post-conflict countries, urging the IMF and World Bank to move forward quickly on proposals which recognise their special needs.

Post-conflict countries were also discussed at the recent Annual Meetings of the IMF and World Bank in Washington. The Development Committee of the IMF and World Bank recognised that for a number of countries, especially those with large and protracted arrears to multilateral institutions, the international community should explore additional ways to provide assistance more quickly and effectively. Bank and Fund staff were asked to develop guidelines and to report back to the Committee at the Spring Meetings in April. It was also agreed that interim assistance to post-conflict countries would be taken as counting towards their track-record under the HIPC Initiative.

SCOTLAND

Police and Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve the relationship between the police and ethnic minority communities. [56715]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 2 November 1998]: I am satisfied that all Scotland's Chief Constables have already developed and are vigorously pursuing progressive race relation policies both within their forces and reaching out to the communities they serve. These policies were developed in collaboration with leaders of ethnic communities. Police officers are required to give full weight to and robustly investigate racial incidents. A new offence of racial harassment and a requirement on courts to take account of any racial element in an offence were introduced in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 and demonstrate our commitment to forging greater harmony within our communities.

Chefs

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the current number of vacancies for chefs in Scotland. [57064]

Mr. Dewar: The figures available refer only to vacancies notified to Employment Service jobcentres. Estimates suggest that about a third of all vacancies within the UK are notified to jobcentres, but this can vary by area and type of job.

In July 1998, there were 1,367 unfilled vacancies for chefs and cooks at Employment Service jobcentres in Scotland.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of Scottish catering course graduates who find employment as chefs in the Scottish tourism industry. [57063]

Mr. Dewar: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the catering profession in the Scottish Chefs Centre. [57065]

Mr. Dewar: I have occasion to visit catering establishments from time to time, when I both meet members of the catering profession and enjoy the fruits of their labours. But I have not visited the Scottish Chefs Centre.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Vaccines

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will assess the findings contained in the papers by Robert E. Weibel and others in Paediatrics March 1998 on the links between acute encephalopathy associated with attenuated measles vaccines; [56969]

(2) if he will assess the findings contained in the paper by Gina Delgiudice-Asch MD and Eric Hollander MD published in CNS Spectrums May 1997 on a review of clinical observations with respect to the possible auto-immune basis or autism a copy of which has been sent to him. [56971]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 24 October 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the Answers given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health on 4 November 1998, Official Report, column 617.

Autism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking (1) to ensure that educational authorities in Scotland have sufficient funds to develop new services for autistic children; and if he will make a statement; [57615]

(2) to instruct each education authority within the meaning of section 145 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1962 to provide him with information on the provision of special educational facilities for children who suffer from autism or other forms of early childhood psychosis; and if he will make a statement; [57618]

(3) to issue specific guidance on education services for autistic children in Scotland; and if he will make a statement; [57616]

(4) to ensure that each child with autism in Scotland receives a relevant educational service; and if he will make a statement; [57617]

(5) to collect information centrally on autistic children in Scotland; and if he will make a statement; [57620]

(6) to issue specific guidance on services for autistic children in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [57619]

Mrs. Liddell: Education authorities have a statutory duty to secure the adequate and efficient provision of education for the children in their respective areas, including children with special educational needs. The services which any particular authority chooses to provide for its area and the nature of educational provision deemed suitable for any particular child at any given time, including a child with special educational needs, is a matter for it to decide in the first instance. The costs of services provided by authorities are met from their general funding.

The Framework for Mental Health Services for Scotland published in September 1997 provides a template by which Local Authorities and Health Boards in Scotland will work together to respond to the assessed needs of their local population in respect of the organisation of mental health services including where appropriate services for children and adolescents.

The Scottish Office Education and Industry Department commissions research and development work over a range of special education issues aimed at helping education authorities and other interested organisations to offer more effective provision. In June 1997 it published Interchange No. 46: Educational Provision for Children with Autism in Scotland (ISSN 0969–613X). This reports the results of a study examining where and how children with autistic spectrum disorders throughout Scotland are being educated. The project aimed to:

(a) develop an educational definition of autism to identify those children who need specific forms of education regardless of whether there is a formal diagnosis of an autistic spectrum disorder;

(b) identify the number of children reported to have autistic spectrum disorders in Scotland and the type of educational placements they attend;

(c) identify the kinds of educational practice with respect to these children and to highlight any issues of satisfaction or concern with those practices, as expressed by parents and professionals; and

(d) identify good practice in the education of these pupils and to make recommendations based on examples of good practice in Scotland and elsewhere.

A copy of Interchange No. 46 was distributed to all headteachers, directors of education, teachers' associations and voluntary organisations in Scotland. A copy has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

The Government wish to improve provision for special education needs and in May this year it issued Special Educational Needs in Scotland: A Discussion Paper. This paper seeks views on how the existing arrangements for special educational needs provision can be improved and made more responsive to the requirements of children with special educational needs and their families. Both Autism (Scotland) and the National Autistic Society have submitted a response. The response to the Discussion Paper as a whole is currently being evaluated and the Government will respond shortly.

Information on the school population is collected annually by the Scottish Office in the school census. The census undertaken in September 1998 requested for the first time information on children with autistic spectrum disorder.

"Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland"

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish the next edition of Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland. [56980]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 29 October 1998]: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth (Mrs. McKenna) on 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 605.

Scottish Environment Protection Agency

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Second Annual Report of the Scottish Environment Protection Agency will be published. [58944]

Mr. Dewar: A copy of SEPA's Second Annual Report and Accounts will be placed in the Library on Tuesday 10 November. It contains details of the progress made by SEPA during the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998, the Agency's second year of operation.

Health Funding

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional funds he has made available to health boards, the Common Services Agency, the State Hospital and the Scottish Council for Postgraduate Medical and Dental Education for (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02. [58946]

Mr. Galbraith: My right hon. Friend has today announced how the extra £1.8 billion flowing from the Comprehensive Spending Review will be allocated to the National Health Service in Scotland for the next 3 years. The extra allocations are £280m revenue and £20m capital, £547m and £43m, £852m and £58m for 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 respectively.

For 1999–2000 £60m of the £280m revenue is being earmarked along with £80m of existing recurring funds for a new long term Modernisation Programme. This Programme is designed to improve the services provided for patients and ensure the National Health Service in Scotland is prepared for the 21st century.

In the Modernisation Programme £43m will be directed centrally for planned strategic developments in, for example, areas of information technology, education and training, and to implement proposals arising from the Acute Services Review and the forthcoming Public Health White Paper. The balance of the Modernisation Programme funds (£97m) will be distributed with Health Board allocations, again for implementing national strategic developments such as improving care in the community, reducing waiting times and waiting lists and investing in information technology.

Details of the Health Board allocations for 1999–2000 and the indicative allocations for the Common Services Agency, the State Hospital and Scottish Council for Postgraduate Medical and Dental Education are shown in the table.

Children's Safeguards Review

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends announcing the Government's response to the Children's Safeguard Review prepared by Roger Kent; and if he will make a statement. [58947]

Mr. Dewar: Action is being taken on a number of fronts to safeguard and promote the welfare of children living away from home. Today I am pleased to announce that the Government's response to Mr. Kent's Review has been made available in the Libraries of both Houses. We consulted widely on the Review and its 61 recommendations. We see it as an important milestone in raising standards and improving services for looked after children. Our response demonstrates our practical commitment to this process and sets out priorities for action. That commitment will be underpinned by resources.

I can announce today that an additional £36.7m over the next 3 years will be made available to improve children's services, £15m of which will be allocated specifically for implementation of key proposals in the Review. The Government's response, supported by additional resources, is a clear indication of the importance we attach to this task. It will be made widely available to local authorities and voluntary organisations so that they can play their full part in helping to protect and secure better outcomes for this vulnerable group. We owe them nothing less.

Food-related Scientific Services

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the independent group appointed in May to undertake a review of food-related scientific services in Scotland is due to report. [58950]

Mr. Galbraith: The Review Group led by Professor Morag Timbury provided me with their final report on 23 October and copies are available in the House of Commons Library. I am very grateful to the Chairman and Members of the Group for undertaking this complex review of a service which is an essential element of the food law enforcement and surveillance system which directly helps to safeguard public health. The detailed recommendations presented by the Group will be very carefully considered in order to ensure that all necessary changes to the existing system can be introduced to secure an efficient and effective food-related scientific service.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements were made by or through his Department for the arrival of Senator Pinochet in the United Kingdom. [57042]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 4 November 1998, Official Report, column 601.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all representations and telephone calls made by his Department about Senator Pinochet between 14 and 17 October; and to whom they were made. [57966]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 2 November 1998]: This Department made no representations and does not keep comprehensive records of telephone calls. But there were a number of calls with the relevant authorities at the time of his arrest, and my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary received a telephone call from the Chilean Foreign Minister on 17 October.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) of 22 October 1998, Official Report, column 1206, and to the answer given to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) of 27 October 1998, Official Report, column 124, if he will list the precise dates on which Senator Pinochet has been in the United Kingdom since 1 May 1997. [57659]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 2 November 1998]: Pursuant to an answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 27 October 1998, Official Report, column 124, our records indicate that Senator Pinochet arrived in the United Kingdom on 29 September 1997 and left on 21 October 1997, with a break abroad between 5–17 October. He arrived in London on his current visit on 22 September 1998.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications his Department received from the Embassy in Chile in the week prior to the arrest of Senator Pinochet. [58417]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On 9 October, the Embassy inquired about Senator Pinochet's health and whereabouts following press inquiries it had received that he had died that afternoon in London. The Embassy afterwards faxed a note of this incident for the record to London. On 16 October, the Embassy commented on reports of Spanish judicial moves against Senator Pinochet.

Gibraltar

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives were rejected during the United Kingdom presidency of the EU by Spain consequent to the dispute over the status of Gibraltar. [55981]

Ms Quin [pursuant to her reply, 26 October 1998, c. 86]: An administrative error led to an incorrect reference to the number of instruments adopted at the Justice and Home Affairs Council on 28–29 May. A revised answer is printed below.

Before the start of the UK Presidency, Spain objected to various draft instruments in the Justice and Home Affairs field because of the terms relating to the inclusion of Gibraltar. We fully consulted the Government of Gibraltar throughout the ensuing negotiations during our Presidency. The Government of Gibraltar reluctantly decided that Gibraltar should be excluded from these instruments rather than participate as part of the UK legal jurisdiction. Two instruments were adopted at the Justice and Home Affairs Council on 28–29 May on this basis (ie with Gibraltar excluded): the Driving Disqualifications Convention and the European Judicial Network Joint Action. Gibraltar was excluded from a third measure at the JHA Council which has not yet been adopted (the Eurodac Convention).

Visitor Visas

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he collects regarding the numbers of people who, having been refused visit visas to enter the United Kingdom, have subsequently been granted visas as a result of a new application at a later date. [57334]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department does not record this information.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people, and from which countries, had visitors' visa applications rejected by UK officials in each of the last three years. [58286]

Mr. Fatchett: The number of visit visa applications (including short term students) refused at overseas Posts in the last three years is as follows:

Year	Number
1995	65,209
1996	69,791
1997	60,019

Our statistics are recorded by country of application but do not show the country of origin of the applicant.

Antarctic Treaty Secretariat

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects progress to be made on the establishment of an Antarctic Treaty Secretariat; and if he will make a statement. [58231]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Antarctic Treaty Secretariat may be discussed at the next meeting of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to be held in Peru in May 1999. The need for an Antarctic Treaty Secretariat has long been acknowledged by Consultative Parties, including the UK. But consensus on its location has not yet been reached.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent initiatives his Department has taken to resolve conflict in Sierra Leone. [57796]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are playing a leading role in helping to promote lasting peace, democracy and prosperity in Sierra Leone. Britain is hosting the first meeting of the Sierra Leone Contract Group on 5 November. The meeting is intended to boost the efforts of the International community to build peace and reconciliation in Sierra Leone. Britain is also helping to resolve conflict by supporting the disarmament and reintegration of ex-combatants, through a £6.5 million pledge from the Department for International Development.

International Forum for Federalism

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the planned participation by representatives from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) European Communities institutions at the inaugural conference of an International Forum for Federalism to be held by the Canadian Government. [58276]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are aware that the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada suggested the idea of an International Forum for Federalism in a speech to the London School of Economics and Political Science on 29 October. However, it would not be appropriate for HMG to make a statement on this initiative which, we understand, is only at an early stage of development.

Tobacco (EU Aid)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy on European Union aid to tobacco growers. [57182]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

The Government strongly disapprove of the Common Agricultural Policy support regime for tobacco. We believe that the Community should progressively disengage from support for tobacco production on grounds of health and cost. We continue to press for further progress in this area following the reform of the regime agreed in June of this year.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Waste Recycling

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of waste from the London boroughs of (a) Edmonton and (b) Lewisham is recycled. [56749]

Mr. Meale: Information from the Department's Municipal Waste Survey shows that the percentage of waste collected for recycling in 1996–97 in the London boroughs of Enfield (which includes Edmonton) and Lewisham were:

London borough	Percentage
Enfield[1]	6.4
Lewisham	2.8

[1] Total waste includes amounts collected at North London Waste Authority civil amenity sites situated in the borough of Enfield. Waste collected for recycling includes material recovered through mechanised metal extraction.

Driving Test Centres

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas) of 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 7, what plans the Driving Standards Agency has to re-establish a test centre in Stafford. [57486]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency remains committed to re-establishing a driving test centre in Stafford. The search for a suitable site is continuing.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the remit of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment; and what proposals for public participation in any decision relating to such changes he intends to make. [57412]

Mr. Meacher: The terms of reference for the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment already include the provision of advice on request to the Secretary of State. In future we shall be seeking advice from ACRE not only on the direct and indirect effects of genetically modified organisms into the environment but also on the possible resultant changes in agronomic practice and the subsequent effects on biodiversity. ACRE's advice on these questions will be made public through the DETR public register.

Recycled Land

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 28 July 1998, Official Report, column 110, if he will publish the Oxford Brookes University research on the use of economic instruments to make it attractive to develop new housing on recycled land. [57928]

Mr. Raynsford: As part of the Modernising Planning initiative this year, Oxford Brookes University were commissioned to lead some seminars with stakeholders on the development of planning obligations, including the role of economic instruments, in connection with a wide range of development interests, including housing. The seminars were held under 'Chatham House' rules, with participants contributing under the assurance of confidentiality. Following the seminars Oxford Brookes University prepared a report to the Department with their findings. The Department is now considering these but has no plans to publish the report.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much Bechtel is charging per day to take over the project management of the Jubilee Line extension. [58202]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The contract between London Transport and Bechtel covers the provision of personnel with a structured charging mechanism, the details of which are commercially confidential.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the estimated start date of the Birmingham Northern Relief Road. [58408]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The start date is subject to the early determination of any appeal against the High Court judgment of 20 October on the statutory challenge to the orders for the scheme.

Kyoto Agreement

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of progress towards implementing the Kyoto agreement by (a) the United Kingdom, (b) other members of the European Union and (c) the United States of America. [57881]

Mr. Meale: On 26 October we became one of the first developed countries to launch a consultation paper on meeting its Kyoto commitments. The paper lists the steps we have already taken and sets out in detail further options on how the UK could reduce its emissions of greenhouse gases. It demonstrates that the UK is well placed to meet both its legally binding Kyoto target to cut greenhouse gas emissions to 12.5% below 1990 levels by 2008 to 2012 and our domestic aim of a 20% cut in CO_2 emissions by 2010. Greenhouse gas emissions are already about 7% below 1990 levels; and, on current policies, would be about 10% below by 2010.

European Union Member States are required under the Council Decision for a monitoring mechanism of Community CO_2 and other greenhouse gas emissions to report annually on their emissions. The UK Government monitor these reports closely. This mechanism has now been amended to allow assessment of progress towards meeting Member States' Kyoto targets.

Through our Washington Embassy and other contacts I receive regular reports of action taken, and proposed, by the US Government to reduce their greenhouse gas emissions. A recent US Administration report ("The Kyoto Protocol and the President's Policies to Address Climate Change: Administration Economic Analysis", July 1998) assessing the economic implications of their Kyoto target concluded that there was a strong rationale for action because of the dangers of climate change, and that the costs of doing so were likely to be modest.

Great Barford Bypass

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to instruct the Highways Agency to appoint consultants in relation to the Great Barford Bypass. [58102]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This scheme is included in our Targeted Programme of Improvements listed in A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England. That means that the scheme will definitely start within the next seven years, subject only to any outstanding statutory procedures. Detailed decisions on the timing of the schemes in the programme will be made shortly.

In the light of these decisions, the appointment of consultants and design agents will be commissioned to meet the agreed programme.

Arco Arun

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the sinking of the Arco Arum and subsequent salvage attempts in the Thames off Thurrock. [58077]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I believe my hon. Friend's question relates to the vessel Arco Arun. I understand that this aggregate dredger grounded off Broadness Point at approximately 1450 hours on 13 October. The vessel sustained a split in her hull and subsequently sank, clear of the navigation channel. No other vessels were involved, there were no casualties and, due to the quick response by the Port of London Authority, no damage to the environment. An inquiry by the Marine Accidents Investigation Branch is in progress and the PLA is conducting its own internal investigations. I understand that, following the appointment of salvors by the vessel owners, it became apparent that flooding had spread throughout the vessel and that specialist equipment would be required. The vessel owners have therefore now engaged the services of a company experienced in heavy lift and removal operations and they are currently assessing the situation.

Housing Associations

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what procedures exist for him to monitor housing associations; and if he will arrange for the operations of the Springboard Housing Association to be investigated. [58097]

Mr. Raynsford: The Housing Corporation has the statutory responsibility for registering, regulating and funding housing associations, now known as Registered Social Landlords.

Springboard Housing Association is registered with the Housing Corporation. The association, along with all other Registered Social Landlords, is required to meet the Housing Corporation's Performance Standards. Compliance with these standards is reviewed annually. The Corporation investigates where there is evidence of non-compliance and has powers to ensure remedial action by RSLs in cases of serious mismanagement or misconduct.

I have asked the Housing Corporation to contact the hon. Member direct to answer any specific concerns.

Millennium Experience (Cable Car)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the role of the cable car link to the Millennium Experience; and how many passengers it is expected to carry. [58018]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Millennium Access transport strategy was developed before the proposed cable car, being promoted by a private company, was a consideration. The New Millennium Experience Company has estimated that 2 per cent. of visitors would use the cable car for part of their journey to the Dome. Should it not proceed there would be sufficient capacity on other modes to carry visitors to the Dome who might otherwise have used the cable car.

Chideock Bypass

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the COBA study into options for a Chideock Bypass. [58223]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 3 November 1998]: No COBA study into options for a Chideock bypass has been carried out. At the 1994 public inquiry into the A35 Chideock/Morcombelake bypass one of the alternatives proposed by objectors was a single carriageway bypass for Chideock alone. The Highways Agency assessed the cost of this scheme as £5.9 million with a COBA net present value of £0.7 million at low traffic growth and £3.7 million at high traffic growth. But this scheme was not considered to represent a viable bypass for the village. An estimate was made by the Highways Agency in 1997 that a single carriageway bypass with climbing lanes for Chideock would cost approximately £12.5 million.

Teesside Development Corporation

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what happened to the (a) general furniture and (b) boardroom furniture which belonged to Teesside Development Corporation after the demise of the Corporation in April. [58303]

Mr. Meale: I understand that the Corporation's furniture was sold as part of a packaged disposal of its office equipment during its final three-month period.

Leasehold Reform

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 31 March 1998, Official Report, column 493, when he expects that the Green Paper on leasehold reform will be published. [58473]

Mr. Raynsford: We hope to issue our consultation paper on leasehold reform shortly.

Buses (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what review is being undertaken by his Department of the performance of bus franchises in London; and if he will make a statement. [58226]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The performance of bus passenger services in London is a matter for London Transport. The Department receives regular reports of the overall performance on the bus network and monitors this against targets set by the Secretary of State.

I would refer my hon. Friend to the Government's White Paper "A Mayor and Assembly for London" in which we have said that the present arrangements work well but that Transport for London should be free to develop and improve these arrangements working within a statutory framework similar to the present one.

Private Cars (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce detailed proposals on the reduction of private car traffic in central London. [58227]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government will be giving the Mayor of London the responsibility and the powers to deal with strategic traffic issues in the capital. The Mayor will produce an integrated transport strategy for London. Boroughs will be required to produce local implementation plans to give effect to this. Meanwhile the Government are promoting initiatives in London to improve public transport and encourage use of modes other than the private car—in line with our White Paper 'A New Deal for Transport'.

Climate Change Conference

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the aspects of policy covered by the Government's obligation to the Buenos Aires climate change conference to be held in November. [58229]

Mr. Meacher: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will be making a statement to the Buenos Aires Climate Change Conference (COP4) on Thursday 12 November. He will urge that as much progress as possible is made on outstanding implementation, questions of the Kyoto Protocol at COP4 and agreement on a work plan for early resolution of remaining issues. He will also update the Conference on progress made by the United Kingdom Government in meeting its own commitments as set out in the consultation paper 'UK Climate Change Programme', which was issued on 26 October.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the delegation he is sending to the Buenos Aires climate convention to be held in November. [58230]

Mr. Meacher: The UK delegation for the Fourth Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change will consist of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, myself and the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) and a total of 26 officials from the Departments of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, Trade and Industry, International Development and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Coaches (London)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the current volume at London coach terminals of passengers in transit to locations outside London. [58673]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Coach services interchange at several locations in London including Victoria Coach Station, Bulleid Way, Heathrow Airport, King's Cross and Russell Square. The Government do not compile information about these services. However, I understand it is estimated that around 3 million passengers departing from Victoria Coach Station each year transfer from other coach services at the Station.

Airline Subsidies

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) legal and (b) diplomatic steps he is taking to stop European Union countries providing state subsidies to national airlines. [58474]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Application of the rules in the Treaty of Rome which govern state subsidies to national airlines is a matter for the European Commission. The UK Government oppose in principle all such subsidies which distort competition in the European single aviation market, and takes advantage of the limited rights granted to Member States under the Treaty, and of appropriate diplomatic opportunities, to present its views. The Commission now assesses requests for state aid more stringently than it did previously, and, when authorising aid to Alitalia in 1997, stated that it did not expect there to be any further such cases.

Councillors

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will place in the Library the replies to the letters to local authorities asking them how many of their councillors are (a) men and (b) women; [58362]

(2) how many councillors for each local authority are (a) men and (b) women; [58363]

(3) what percentage of all local authority councillors are women; which council has the highest percentage of women councillors; and which has the lowest. [58364]

Mr. Raynsford: Research carried out by the publishers of the Municipal Year Book in the summer indicates that approximately 26 per cent. of councillors in the UK are female.

The replies to the letters to local authorities to which my right hon. Friend refers are not held by this Department. The question of these being placed in the Library is a matter for the Minister for Women and I have asked her to write to my right hon. Friend on this subject.

Pacific Crane

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions at the time of the accident on Saturday 24 October at Barrow in Furness, involving the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd ship the Pacific Crane, what nuclear waste was carried in the ship; and what was its origin; and if he will make a statement. [58669]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There was no nuclear material on board the Pacific Crane at the time of the incident.

Leasehold Properties

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of residential property in England, by regions, is owned on a leasehold basis. [58546]

Mr. Raynsford: The Survey of English Housing for 1996–97 found that 14 per cent. of residential properties in England were owned on a leasehold basis. The regional distribution is shown in the table:

Government office region	Freehold accommodation	Leasehold accommodation
North East	87	13
North West and Merseyside	70	30
Yorkshire and Humberside	91	8
The North	80	19
East Midlands	97	3
West Midlands	90	10
The Midlands	93	7
Eastern	93	7
London	71	29
South East	89	10
South West	90	11
The South	86	15
England	86	14

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those ministers who are responsible for greening their departments. [58948]

African Elephants

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the outcome of the third dialogue meeting between African elephant range states held in Arusha, Tanzania from 28 September to 2 October; and if he will make a statement. [58949]

Mr. Meacher: As part of a continuing dialogue, African elephant range states met recently at Arusha to discuss implementation of decisions made at last year's CITES Conference to transfer the elephant populations of Botswana, Namibia and Zimbabwe to Appendix II of the CITES Convention to enable limited trade in elephant products to resume. The UK and other contributors to the costs of the meeting, the European Commission, the USA and Japan, attended as observers.

The 1997 Conference decisions set a number of conditions that have to be met before an experimental one off transhipment of ivory from the three proponent states to Japan can go ahead next year. These include the establishment of new pan-African and Asian monitoring systems to assess the level of elephant poaching and illegal trade in ivory. The World Conservation Union (IUCN) and TRAFFIC (the wildlife trade monitoring arm of IUCN and the World Wide Fund for Nature) were charged with developing these systems. Their proposals were presented to the Arusha meeting and endorsed by the range states present.

While African range states indicated their readiness to help finance the monitoring systems, there will be a need for external funding to get them up and running. Since effective monitoring systems will be vital to informing decision makers on whether the tenth Conference decisions have any adverse effect on levels of poaching and illegal trade, I am today pledging $40,000 of UK support for the new system to monitor illegal trade in ivory. This will enable the system to be set up and provide sufficient resources to fund its first year of operation.

The tenth Conference decisions also addressed the problem of growing Government stockpiles of ivory derived from management programmes and seizures. Parties agreed that fully audited stocks should be taken out of the system by way of non-commercial disposal. In return donors would provide financial assistance for elephant conservation and community development programmes with all monies managed under Conservation Trust Funds. At Arusha, the fourteen African countries that have had their registered government stockpiles audited by TRAFFIC discussed the best way to proceed. They agreed to co-operate in seeking financial assistance for conservation by this means and to route any indications of interest through the CITES Secretariat.

In keeping with this spirit of co-operation and in the expectation that this will lead to offers from other donors, including conservation organisations, I am today writing to the CITES Secretariat to let them know that the UK is willing to contribute £60,000 to fund conservation work in return for disposal of part of the registered ivory stockpile.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Computer Systems

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to modernise the Department's computer systems; and if he will make a statement. [58761]

Mr. Timms: Modernisation of the Welfare State is a priority for the Government and will involve major changes over a period of time to the ways in which welfare services are delivered. A key element of the strategy for the future is to provide the next generation of computer systems required to support improved service delivery to the public, whilst at the same time reducing the scope for error or fraud.

The ACcess to CORporate Data (ACCORD) procurement project was created to put in place Information System/Information Technology (IS/IT) supply arrangements with the private sector. The procurement, conducted in accordance with Government and EC procurement regulations, set out to establish Private Finance Initiative/Public Private Partnership (PFI/PPP) arrangements with suitable service providers.

First of all, in order to develop the core systems for the new IS/IT, the Department is announcing today that it intends to establish a close, long-term working relationship with a single preferred Service Provider. The AFFINITY consortium (led by Electronic Data Systems Ltd. with IBM UK Ltd., Cable and Wireless Communications Ltd. and PricewaterhouseCoopers) has been selected for this role and they will start work with the Department immediately to do the preparatory work necessary to design the strategic components of the next generation of IS/IT.

The Department is also announcing that it has selected three service providers it intends to work with for the provision of a wide range of IS/IT services in the future. As well as the AFFINITY consortium these will be:

ARCWAY, a consortium led by British Telecommunications plc with Bull Information Systems Ltd. and SEMA Group UK Ltd.; and ACCORD, a consortium led by ICL plc with Anderson Consulting, Experian Ltd., Microsoft Ltd., Rand Information Systems Ltd. and Ferret Information Systems Ltd.

These selections are essential prerequisites to the detailed negotiations which will allow the commercial arrangements to be finalised with the service providers.

Following this, as supply needs arise from now and over the next 10 years, contracts for specific IS/IT services will be awarded through these providers.

We believe this arrangement between public and private provision is an important step towards modernising the Welfare State. In particular the establishing of a strategic relationship and joint working arrangements with the Preferred Service Provider will enable us to harness together the skills from both sectors.

Pensioner to Working Age Ratio

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to re-examine the pensioner: working age ratio prediction for each five yearly period up to 2040; and if he will make a statement. [58228]

Mr. Denham: National population projections are produced by the Government Actuary's Department (GAD). GAD normally carry out projections every two years. The latest, 1996-based, projections were published on 27 November 1997. The next planned set of national population projections will be 1998-based and will be available towards the end of 1999.

NIRS 2 Computer

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what compensation will be available for people whose benefit payments are delayed as a result of problems with the NIRS 2 computer; [58259]

(2) how many pensioners (a) have been and (b) are forecast to be affected by the difficulties in introducing the NIRS 2 computer; and in what circumstances pensioners are not receiving their full pensions. [58260]

(3) what estimates his Department has made of the number of people affected (a) in total and (b) according to benefit claimed as a result of the difficulties with the introduction of the NIRS 2 system; [55850]

(4) how many new claimants have been awarded full benefit entitlement without establishment of national insurance records as a result of the difficulties with the introduction of the NIRS 2 computer system. [55848]

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many (a) pensioners, (b) widows and (c) widowers are currently in receipt of emergency payments because of the failure of the NIRS 2 computer system; [55854]

(2) what tests were carried out before the NIRS 2 computer system was implemented. [55855]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 22 October 1998]: I refer the hon. Members to the Written Answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) on 4 November 1998, Official Report, columns 603–06.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners claimed (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) council tax benefit in the latest year for which figures are available (i) in total and (ii) by each region of the United Kingdom. [57899]

Mr. Denham: The information is in the table.

Notes:

1. Pensioners are defined, for Income Support/Housing Benefit/Council Tax Benefit purposes, as single persons aged 60 or over, or couples (married or unmarried) where one or both partners is aged 60 or over.

2. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand, and may not sum due to rounding.

3. Council Tax Benefit/Housing Benefit data exclude second adult rebate cases.

4. There is an overlap in the figures, as most people receive both Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

5. Housing Benefit data for Northern Ireland are based on November 1997 data.

6. Council Tax Benefit does not exist in Northern Ireland.

Child Support Agency

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases of suicide by men from whom the CSA has sought payments are known to his Department since the agency began operations. [57292]

Angela Eagle: The Child Support Agency does not routinely keep records on the circumstances surrounding the death of a non-resident parent. The many factors that can lead a person to consider suicide do not point towards single explanations.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the funding of age-related rebates in respect of members of contracted-out money purchase schemes. [58762]

Mr. Denham: Employers who operate contracted-out occupational pension schemes provide their employees with a pension to replace the pension they would have got had they remained in the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme (SERPS).

In contracted-out occupational schemes, both employer and employee pay lower rate National Insurance Contributions in recognition that full SERPS will not be paid. In a Contracted-Out Money Purchase Scheme (COMPS) part of the rebate is deducted from the national insurance contributions due by the employer. The remainder, known as the age-related rebate, is paid by the Contributions Agency to the pension scheme in the tax year following that in which it is due.

Section 42A of the Pension Schemes Act 1993 (PSA) provides the legislative authority for the age related rebate to be paid by the Secretary of State for Social Security to the pension scheme. This section was inserted into the PSA by the Pensions Act 1995. The intention is that these payments should be funded directly from the National Insurance Fund and classed as revenue forgone. However, the necessary provision to facilitate funding in this manner was erroneously omitted from the Pensions Act. So while there is a legislative duty to make the payments, there is no authority to fund them from the National Insurance Fund. As result a number of ultra vires payments have been made from the National Insurance Fund totalling around £490,000 which will have to be refunded from money voted by Parliament.

An amendment to the PSA to correct this defect will be put before Parliament. This will allow the payments to be funded properly from the National Insurance Fund in accordance with the original intention. Until the provisions are enacted temporary arrangements are necessary to ensure that the payments can continue to be made. Provision will also be made to ensure that the National Insurance Fund reimburses those accounts responsible for funding the payments up to the time when the legislation was brought into force.

Legislation under s177(1) of the PSA does, by default, allow the payments to be paid from money provided by Parliament. Since Parliament did not envisage using provision in this way the ambits of the DSS Votes do not cover age related rebates. A Supplementary Estimate is therefore needed to extend the ambit of Class XII, Vote 2. A token Supplementary Estimate of £1,000 has been sought on Vote 2 to amend the ambit to enable payments, totalling £82 million, to be made to Contracted-Out Money Purchase Schemes in respect of age related rebates. As the Contributions Agency computer system, NIRS2, does not have the functionality to separate the payments in respect of age related rebates, which are paid in conjunction with personal pensions, Vote 2 will, therefore, also be responsible for paying personal pensions. The National Insurance Fund which does have the legislative power to pay personal pensions will refund Vote 2 for the payments made on its behalf. These arrangements will continue until the defective legislation is corrected. An advance of £77 million has been sought from the Contingencies Fund to finance urgent expenditure. The advance will be repaid from Vote 2 when Parliament has approved the necessary token Supplementary Estimate.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Quantum Project)

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made on the Prison Service Quantum Project. [58941]

Mr. George Howarth: On 10 August 1998, the Director General of the Prison Service called a temporary halt to the Quantum Project and set up a thorough review which will take up to six months. In a message to Prison Service staff he said:

"It has become apparent that it may not be possible to achieve the original objectives of providing the Service with improved information systems and business processes in a way which safeguards the vital operational capability of the Service".

These and other concerns will be addressed in the review process, which will reassess the way forward and consider a range of alternative options. The objective is to ensure that the project meets the needs of the Prison Service.

Police (Objectives)

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what objectives he will be determining for policing for 1999–2000. [58942]

Mr. Straw: I will announce my objectives, which identify our Ministerial priorities for policing in 1999–2000, together with supporting Key Performance Indicators, tomorrow, 6 November. I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library at 10.00 am.

Asylum Seekers

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are being made to issue monthly statistics of asylum. [58943]

Mr. Straw: Until now, the asylum statistics have been available only in the Home Offices' annual Asylum Statistics Bulletin and in a summary form twice a year in the Control of Immigration Statistical Bulletin. These Bulletins contain detailed information on asylum applications, demographic characteristics of asylum seekers, decisions, appeals, detention and removals.

Selected monthly information has, however, been available only on request from the Home Office Press Office. I am therefore arranging for selected monthly statistics of asylum to be placed on the Home Office Research Development Statistics Website (http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/index.htm) on the 25th of each month, or the next working day, and to be also available through the Library and the Home Office Press Office.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the percentages of the total number of asylum seekers who were given (a) refugee status and (b) exceptional leave to remain for each year for which figures are known since 1993; what assessment he has made of the factors underlying changes in those percentages; and if he will make a statement. [57759]

Mr. George Howarth: The requested information is given in the table.

Cases[1] recognised as refugees and granted asylum and those granted exceptional leave, excluding dependants[2], as a proportion of all decisions—1993–1997
Principal applicants percentage

Year	Recognised as a refugee and granted asylum	Granted exceptional leave
1993	7	48
1994	4	17
1995	5	16
1996	6	13
1997[3]	11	9

[1] Information is of initial determination decisions, excluding the outcome of appeals and other subsequent decisions.
[2] Cases not recognised as refugees but granted exceptional leave.
[3] Provisional figures

The proportion of applicants recognised as refugees and granted asylum shows little variation between 1993 and 1996. The increase to 11 per cent. in 1997 reflects grants to Somali and Federal Republic of Yugoslavia nationals. In the first nine months of 1998, the proportion has increased further to 17 per cent. This is partly due to changes made in 1998 so that deserving cases are recognised earlier in the process.The fall in the numbers of asylum applicants granted exceptional leave after 1993 reflects the introduction in July 1993 of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act, in which grants of exceptional leave were limited to cases where there were genuine humanitarian factors.

The Home Office is continually reassessing the situation in each country in the context of the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its associated 1967 protocol.

Young Offenders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many 15 and 16 year old youths were held on remand in adult prisons at the most recent date for which information is available; [58354]

(2) which adult prisons were used for the remand of 15 and 16 year old youths on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) the latest date for which such information is available. [58353]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information relates to the remand prison population of 15 and 16 year olds on the last day of the month and is given in the table. Young persons held in adult prisons are normally accommodated separately from adults.

Population of 15 and 16 year olds on remand in adult prisons on 30 April 1997 and 30 September 1998, by establishment

[1] Provisional figures

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the timetable of the Youth Justice Board for ending the remand of 15 and 16 year olds to adult prisons. [58355]

Mr. Boateng: The Government's plans for ensuring that appropriate arrangements are in place for remanded juveniles are being taken forward in the context of the wider programme of work arising from our review of all forms of secure accommodation for young offenders and young people held on remand. Our aim is to implement provisions in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 as soon as possible, and by June 1998 at the latest, to allow the courts to remand directly to local authority secure accommodation 12–14 year olds, 15 and 16 year old girls and, where a place has been identified in advance, vulnerable 15 and 16 year old boys. We will keep under review the existing arrangements for remanding other 15 and 16 year old boys to Prison Service accommodation.

In the meantime, work is being taken forward, with the Youth Justice Board, to improve the standard of care and quality of regimes for remanded and sentenced juveniles held in Prison Service accommodation to ensure that these are appropriate to the needs of young people. We are also making available funds, which will be administered by the Youth Justice Board, to develop local bail support provision to help ensure that custodial remands are used appropriately for the most serious and persistent cases.

Police (World Cup)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the total sum received or to be received by police forces in England and Wales from the Football Association to cover the cost of travel, overseas allowances and overtime in connection with the policing of World Cup matches involving the England team; [58489]

(2) how much in total the Government plan to contribute towards the 24-hour manning of the National Criminal Intelligence Service Football Unit during the World Cup Finals and the costs associated with the provision of football intelligence officers during matches involving the England team. [58490]

Mr. Boateng: The Football Association has met the cost of travel, overseas allowances and overtime for officers from England and Wales. Salary costs have been met by the officers' respective forces. The Football Association also contributed to the cost of relevant police equipment.

The Government agreed to contribute to the costs associated with the 24-hour manning of the National Criminal Intelligence Service during the Finals: and to contribute part of the cost associated with the provision of additional football intelligence officers in France for some England matches. Detailed information about actual costs incurred is operationally sensitive.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the current amount of section 11 funding made available by his Department to the Greater London area; [57909]

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's future policy towards section 11 funding for the Greater London area. [57763]

Mr. George Howarth: Allocations of Home Office section 11 grant for the 1998–99 financial year to local authorities, grant maintained schools and further education colleges in the Greater London area amount to £34.496 million. Nationally, over 97 per cent. of section 11 grant is currently paid to education projects. It has been decided that, from April 1999, responsibility for such funding should rest with the Department for Education and Employment. A further announcement will be made shortly about the administrative arrangements. The Home Office intends to operate a new grant programme to fund projects in fields other than education. The Department is currently consulting interested parties about the design of this new programme, and a further announcement will be made in due course.

Immigration

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases were considered for enforcement under immigration legislation for each year for which figures are known since 1993; and how many deportations were made. [57757]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information, relating to the numbers of cases for which enforcement action was initiated under sections 3(5), 3(6) or 33(1) of the Immigration Act 1971, since 1993; and the number of deportations made, is given in tables 7.2 (Illegal entrants) and 7.4 (Deportation action) of the Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1997" (Cm 4033), for years 1993 and 1994, and in tables 5.1 (Total enforcement action), 5.2 (Illegal entrants) and 5.3 (Deportation action) of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom, First Half 1998", issue 24/98, for years 1995–97. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Channel Islands

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the extent to which European legislation, directives and decisions are enforced upon the Channel Islands and the extent to which the situation has changed since the passing of Protocol 3 to the Treaty of Rome. [57753]

Mr. George Howarth: Protocol 3 to the Treaty of Accession sets out the limited extent to which European Union instruments apply to the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. The normal practice is for relevant European provisions to be given effect in the Islands through local legislation.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from the EU Commission relating to the Channel Islands. [57755]

Mr. George Howarth: No recent representations have been received from the European Commission relating to the Channel Islands.

St. Helena

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British nationality have been received from St. Helena citizens in each of the past five years; and over the same period how many such applications have been granted. [58007]

Mr. George Howarth: The number of grants of British citizenship to British Dependent Territories' citizens from St. Helena is given in the table. The number of such applications received is not available.

Year of grant	Number of grants
1993	8
1994	11
1995	11
1996	17
1997	32

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the procedures surrounding the payment of criminal injuries compensation. [58189]

Mr. Boateng: The procedures surrounding the payment of criminal injuries compensation are regularly reviewed within the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (CICA)—the body which administers the tariff-based scheme introduced with effect from 1 April 1996—as part of the normal management process. CICA's objective is to make awards as soon as the extent of injury and any consequential financial loss has been properly established. There are no plans to undertake any special procedural reviews at this time.

Alcohol Consumption (Public Places)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how local authorities and other agencies could be encouraged, perhaps by changes in the law, to deal more effectively with the problems of street drinking. [58196]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office encourages local authorities to adopt, whenever appropriate, a model byelaw which makes it an offence to consume intoxicating liquor in a designated place after being warned by a constable not to do so. We have also implemented the Confiscation of Alcohol (Young Persons) Act 1997, which enables a constable to confiscate alcohol being drunk or intended to be drunk in public by someone who is under-age.

The Anti-Social Behaviour Order and other provisions in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 will help with specific local problems. Local authorities and the police, with their partners, can include any such problems in the crime and disorder audit which is required under the Act and then go on to develop appropriate strategies for tackling this as part of their overall crime reduction strategy.

Police Manpower

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers on the beat there were in (a) May 1997, (b) May 1998 and (c) September 1998. [58251]

Mr. Boateng: Information on the deployment of police personnel is collected annually by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary. The number of officers on patrol duties in England and Wales is set out in the table:

Date	Patrol	Overall police numbers
March 1997	62,172	127,158
March 1998	62,203	126,856

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Remploy

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what discussions his Department has held with Remploy on its corporate plan; [58419]

(2) what role there will be for Remploy employees and their representatives in drawing up Remploy's corporate plan; [58420]

(3) what discussions his Department has held with Remploy on factory closures; [58421]

(4) what variations to Remploy's targets for 1997–98 have been made for the years (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000; [58422]

(5) what is the forecast subsidy to Remploy in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02; [58452]

(6) when he last met the relevant trade unions to discuss the future operations of Remploy. [58453]

Ms Hodge: I understand that Remploy management meet with the Remploy Consortium of Unions at the National Joint Consultative Committee regularly to discuss a range of issues. In particular, Remploy delivered a series of presentations/discussions in July this year to managers and local shop stewards about the strategy set out in the latest Corporate Plan. In addition, national trade union officers received a presentation in May, in advance of the publication of the plan. Remploy intend to adopt a similar approach next time round, and employees have been invited to put forward questions on future strategy and on how they could be more closely involved in planning Remploy's future.

I am expecting Remploy to submit their next Corporate Plan (covering the 3 years 1999–2000 to 2001–02) shortly, for my approval. I will be discussing it with the Remploy Chairman as usual.

Remploy has agreed a broad strategy with Ministers to improve employer opportunities for disabled people both in factories and through Interwork. As part of their strategy Remploy needs to address overcapacity in their factory network through mergers, changes of trade and factory rationalisation. Details of this strategy have been published in Remploy's Corporate Plan for 1998–99 to 2000–01, and in the Remploy booklet "Planning for our Future", issued to Remploy employees. The operational detail involved in implementing this strategy is a matter for the Remploy Board, as it has to be based on commercial decisions which only Remploy can take.

Remploy's targets for 1999–2000 have not yet been agreed. The following variations were agreed with Remploy for 1998–99 in comparison with 1997–98: average number of disabled people—extra 250; average number of Interworkers—extra 350; progressions—extra 50; operating deficit per disabled worker—decrease of £300 per annum (at cash prices); operating deficit per Interworker—decrease of £100 per annum (at cash prices).

Remploy is currently developing its plans for 1999–2000 and for future years. The subsidy will be subject to those plans and further negotiations with the Department. My predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, East (Mr. Howarth), met the Remploy unions on 2 February 1998. I intend to meet the Remploy unions myself in due course.

Careers Service

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to require Careers Service contractors to meet an externally verified quality framework if they are to become preferred suppliers under the future contracting arrangements for the Careers Service. [56209]

Mr. Mudie: The Careers Service future contracting is being considered. We are currently considering a number of options and I expect to make an announcement on the future contracting arrangements early in the new year.

Class Sizes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements are in place for monitoring progress towards meeting the Government's targets on class sizes. [57510]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 2 November 1998]: In addition to the monitoring information available from the Schools' Census data collected each January, we will also be taking a count of infant pupils and classes in September 1999, September 2000 and September 2001.

Specialist Disability Services

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of the million people with disabilities cited in Support for Disabled People who state they wish to work will benefit from the investment in specialist disability services announced in this document. [58133]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 3 November 1998]: The Government's recent announcement set out action already taking place and proposed changes to help one million disabled people who are not in work but who want to work. This includes the reform of the All Work Test to focus on capacity as well as incapacity; a single gateway interview to provide advice and support into work; and, looking at ways of helping disabled people stay in work through the New Deal for Disabled People.

Our investment of an additional £30m in specialist disability services will be of direct help to some 8,500 disabled people who need extra support to get a job. Since some of this money will be used to test new ways of helping disabled people into work, the actual number helped over time will be greater.

People with a disability or long term illness will also be able to benefit from the New Deal for Disabled People for which £195 million has been set aside for the lifetime of this Parliament. This will pilot a range of initiatives to help disabled people and those with long-term illness into work and training through the Government's Welfare to Work approach.

National Childcare Strategy

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate his Department has made of the cost to local education authorities of carrying out the audit of supply of, and demand for, childcare required under the National Childcare Strategy; [57698]

(2) what money has been made available to local education authorities to carry out audits of the supply of, and demand for, childcare, as required under the National Childcare Strategy. [57700]

Ms Hodge: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her by my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, East (Mr. Howarth) on 16 July 1998, Official Report, column 301. I can confirm that £12 million has now been made available to help local partnerships conduct audits and draw up local childcare plans.

"Partners in Europe"

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) solicited and (b) unsolicited copies of the schools pack "Partners in Europe" were distributed; and how many remain in stock. [58030]

Mr. Mudie: The information and resource pack for schools "Partners in Europe" was distributed in January 1998 to all schools in the UK on the following basis: two to each school in England, one to each school in Scotland, two to each school in Wales and two to each school in Northern Ireland. Each country was responsible for its own distribution. Copies were also sent to LEAs in England, Scotland and Wales, Education and Libraries Boards in Northern Ireland and organisations such as the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges, the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority and OFSTED. Since the initial distribution, there have been 614 requests in England for additional copies. 432 resource packages are currently in stock, but this figure includes the resource pack that was distributed to youth groups in the UK.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the (a) printing, (b) preparation and (c) distribution costs of the schools pack "Partners in Europe". [58029]

Mr. Mudie: The costs of producing the 66,000 copies of the schools pack "Partners in Europe" were shared between the four UK education departments and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The costs were as follows: (a) printing of specially commissioned booklets and wallets, £129,140; (b) other preparation costs, £66,197, and (c) initial distribution costs, £113,947.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judiciary (Training)

Mrs. May: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if the training for the judiciary on the implications of the Human Rights Bill [Lords] will include training relating to (a) equality and (b) disability issues. [57697]

Mr. Hoon: Judicial training is the responsibility of the Judicial Studies Board (JSB) which is an advisory non-departmental public body. The Equal Treatment Advisory Committee of the Board considers all aspects of equal treatment training for the judiciary, including training on increasing awareness of the needs of people with disabilities.

The JSB is currently drawing up the programme of training for full and part-time members of the judiciary in the months prior to implementation of the Human Rights Bill. This will include training on those parts of the European Convention on Human Rights that relate to equality and disability issues.

Property Repossessions

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the numbers of possession actions (a) commenced and (b) concluded by the making of a possession order for (i) mortgagee actions and (ii) landlord actions in England for the last three years. [57487]

Mr. Hoon: The information is as follows:

1995	Mortgage possessions	Landlord possessions
actions started	84,170	104,408
suspended orders	44,723	58,652
final orders	30,535	26,487

Civil Servants (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) if he will provide a breakdown, in numerical and percentage terms, of the ethnic origin of civil servants in his private office, as at 1 October 1997; [56795]

(2) if he will provide a breakdown, in numerical and percentage terms, of the ethnic origin of civil servants in his Department, by grade, as at 1 October 1997. [56793]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers given him today by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office, Official Report, columns 666-71.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing (Controls)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce new controls over landings into the United Kingdom following the publication of consultative proposals issued on 3 March; and if he will make a statement. [58952]

Mr. Morley: From 5 January 1999 it will be a condition of UK fishing vessel licences that at least four hours notice must be given of all landings of whitefish and shellfish by vessels of 20m overall length and above. Landings (discharge of catches) must then be completed within four hours unless otherwise authorised. These requirements will not, however, apply where landings are made into designated ports during specified hours provided the master or his representative submits a copy of a completed logsheet prior to the discharge of catch taking place. The designated ports will be those set out in the consultation paper issued last March although for a number of ports the specified hours of landing have been changed in response to representations received. Prior notification is already required for the landing of the main pelagic species and this will continue to operate.

These arrangements will be kept under review and, if circumstances alter, changes in the arrangements will be considered.

The new arrangements will be consistent with tougher Community controls on landings currently being finalised and expected to operate from 1 January 1999. These will enable Member States to apply national designated port controls to vessels from other Member States and third countries landing into their territory. A more rigorous control requirement for 4 hours' notice of arrival in port is also expected to apply to vessels landing abroad unless specific designated port arrangements operate.

The Fisheries Departments will be writing to vessels owners and other interests later this month advising them about the detailed arrangements including those for providing prior notification of landing.

Fishing (Grant Applications)

Ms Southworth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the charges levied by the Sea Fish Industry Authority when processing applications for grant aid. [58951]

Mr. Morley: The Government intend when the legislative programme allows, to introduce legislation to provide retrospective statutory authority for technical charges levied by the Sea Fish Industry Authority (SFIA) when processing applications for grant aid under the Fisheries Act 1981. This will regularise the position following advice which has cast doubt on the SFIA's view that their powers to charge contained in the Act covered the technical charges which were levied up until 1995.

I believe that the charges levied were reasonable ones and that the costs of making repayments would be disproportionate to any benefit such repayment would confer on those to whom it was made. The Ministry does not therefore propose to meet any claims that are brought before the proposed legislation is in place.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to harmonise the current trial procedures of genetically modified crops in the United Kingdom with those carried out in Europe. [56046]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 November 1998]: Controls over the release and marketing of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) are harmonised across the EU by Directive 90/220/EEC. The information requirements to evaluate the safety of GMO releases are set out in this Directive. However, each consent application is reviewed on a case by case basis and trials procedures may vary according to the characteristics of the GMO and the receiving environment.

Furthermore, no genetically modified plant variety may enter tests and trials for National List purposes unless and until a release consent has been issued under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the regulations made under it. The UK's National List system implements EU Directives 70/457/EEC and 70/458/EEC which harmonises the requirement to establish that varieties are distinct, uniform and stable (DUS) and, for the main agricultural species, that they have a value for cultivation and use (VCU) before being entered on a National List. The National List system has no role in considering the environmental or human safety aspects of genetic modification.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has extend the period of tests required for genetically modified seeds; and if he will make a statement. [56047]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 November 1998]: I have no plans to extend the period of tests required for National List purposes.

National List tests and trials are aimed solely at establishing whether candidate varieties are distinct, uniform and stable (DUS) and have value for cultivation and use (VCU) in the UK. The National List system has no role in addressing the environmental or human safety aspects of genetically modification. Genetically modified plant varieties may not enter National List tests and trials unless and until they have the appropriate release consent under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the regulations made under it. For most varieties, National List tests and trials normally last two years, though this period may be extended if necessary to provide the required information to establish DUS and VCU.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to consult the public on the Supply Chain Initiative for Modification in Agricultural Crops code of practice before it is agreed between Government and industry. [57712]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 November 1998]: The Supply Chain Initiative on Modified Agricultural Crops (SCIMAC) is an industry grouping, which has drawn up guidelines to promote best practice in the growing of genetically modified crops. The Government have welcomed these guidelines as a complement to the statutory controls, but will not give them endorsement until they are satisfied that the industry has implemented measures to secure compliance. It is for the industry to decide what consultations to carry out, and we have impressed upon them the importance of an open and transparent approach.

BSE

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of costs incurred to date by Government and other public sector agencies as a result of releasing witnesses for the BSE inquiry. [57084]

Mr. Rooker: No such estimate has been made. The Inquiry has taken evidence from some 60 witnesses who are current members of MAFF and its agencies.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the inquiry into BSE is considering the possible role of organophosphates in causing this disease. [57301]

Mr. Rooker: The Inquiry are considering all theories put to them including that relating to the possible role of organophosphates.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the current inquiry into BSE to publish its report. [57294]

Mr. Rooker: The Inquiry is due to report to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Secretary of State for Health and the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland by 30 June 1999. The Inquiry's report will be published by Government in due course thereafter.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's responsibility for BSE compensation. [57340]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 November 1998]: Animals suspected of being affected by or exposed to BSE are slaughtered under Section 32 of the Animal Health Act 1981. Under Section 32(3), compensation is payable in respect of the animals slaughtered.

The compensation payable for animals affected by BSE is the market value up to a ceiling of 100% of the indicative market price. The compensation payable for animals suspected of being affected by BSE, but in which the disease is not subsequently confirmed, is the market value of the animal up to a ceiling of 125% of the indicative market price. The indicative market price for the month of November 1998 is £467.

Farmers may also be eligible for payments in relation to exposed animals slaughtered under the Selective Cull, and for offspring animals under the Offspring Cull.

Meat Inspection Charges

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the abattoir industry urging meat inspection charges on a headage only basis. [57727]

Mr. Rooker: The Department has received a number of representations calling for the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) to calculate its charges for hygiene/welfare inspections on a per head basis. The decision for the MHS to calculate its charges on a per-hour basis was taken after full consultation with industry.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if working knowledge of the English language is a condition of employment for foreign veterinarians engaged by the Meat Hygiene Service. [57726]

Mr. Rooker: Foreign veterinarians engaged by the Meat Hygiene Service are required to have a working knowledge of the English language. The MHS has introduced an assessment, as part of the Official Veterinary Surgeon training course, for non-United Kingdom nationals, to assess their ability to understand and communicate in English.

Rabies

Mr. Forth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the incidence of rabies in each EU and EEA country in each of the last five years. [57453]

Mr. Rooker: The incidence of rabies in domestic and wild animals in each EU and EEA Country in each of the last five years was as follows:

Veterinary Service Charges

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of additional official veterinary service charges upon the viability of United Kingdom abattoirs. [57723]

Mr. Rooker: The impact on GB abattoirs will depend upon the circumstances prevailing at individual premises. These include the current level of veterinary supervision, the size and throughput of the premises, the complexity and standard of hygiene of operations and the type of animal being slaughtered. The MHS will notify plant operators of the intended arrangements and the charging implications for their plant in advance of any changes being made.

Farm Income (Currency Mechanisms)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which of his Department's publications the basis and operation of the ecu basket of currencies and national green currencies used for calculating price support for agricultural products is described; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which these mechanisms influence the net farm income available to farmers in the United Kingdom (a) currently and (b) following the introduction of the euro. [57484]

Mr. Rooker: The precise basis and operation of the current agrimonetary regime is not outlined in any of my Department's publications.

The agrimonetary regime has sheltered farm incomes from the full effect of the strong pound by slowing down the rate at which currency strength feeds through to the sterling value of CAP prices and direct payments. UK farm incomes are also benefiting from the current green rate freeze, which has been worth £400m to UK farmers over the last two years.

The Commission's draft regulations, which are still under discussion, propose a move to daily market rates, but also include measures for 100% EU financed compensation for any cuts in direct payments in 1999. This would cushion the impact of the end of the green rate freeze on UK farm incomes, and has been welcomed by UK farming organisations.

Beef of the Bone

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is (a) the overall cost to date and (b) the average annual cost per farm of deboning beef products as a result of the ban on sales of beef on the bone. [57503]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 November 1998]: Under the Beef Bones Regulations 1997, deboning may take place in the course of a business at any food premises, including farm shops selling meat, before sale to the ultimate consumer. The estimated costs of these controls were set out in the Regulatory Appraisal which accompanied the Regulations when they were presented to Parliament. A copy is available in the Library of the House. No costs were included or are available for deboning beef on farms as these, with the exception of farm shops, are not food premises as defined in the Food Safety Act 1990 where beef can be deboned.

Piglet Mortality

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of piglets lost annually to predation, and of the economic loss which this represents. [57924]

Mr. Rooker: None. The information necessary to make such estimates is not available centrally.

Agricultural Prices

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional resources will be allocated to assist farming communities with the fall in produce prices. [58190]

Mr. Rooker: The Government fully appreciate the difficulties currently being faced by all sectors of the farming industry. We are well aware, as a result of discussions with farmers' leaders and visits to rural areas, that many farmers would welcome additional assistance to cope with their current difficulties.

However, given the tight position on public expenditure we must give very careful consideration before extending any package of assistance to farmers. We are keenly aware of the case being put by the farming unions and other interested organisations, and are now considering the options available to us.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Webb: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the percentage of the loss to farmers whose cattle are affected by bovine TB which is covered by the Ministry's compensation scheme; and if he will provide a breakdown of his estimate of the total losses incurred. [58075]

Mr. Rooker: The National Farmers Union estimates the total cost to farmers of tuberculosis in cattle in Great Britain to average £5,300 per animal slaughtered, including consequential losses, although the cost to individual farm businesses varies widely.

During 1997 compensation was paid at 75% of market value of cattle slaughtered as TB reactors, subject to a limit (calculated from the average market price for dairy cattle) which averaged £656 across the year. This represents 12% of £5,300. Since 26 August 1998 compensation has been paid equal to the full market value of slaughtered cattle. To the end of October payments made averaged £970, 18% of £5,300.

Cattle Blood

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the regulations which apply to the transport of blood of cattle over 30 months, following their slaughter. [58246]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 November 1998]: Carriers of waste blood from OTMS animals must register with the Environment Agency or the Scottish Environment Protection Agency under the Controlled Waste (Registration of Carriers and Seizure of Vehicles) Regulations 1991. The only exception relates to the transport of blood from diseased animals, which may be transported by persons who hold an approval or registration under the Animal By-Products Order 1992, and who transport the blood in connection with the activity to which the approval or registration applies. In such cases the Order requires the blood to be collected and transported in suitable containers or vehicles in such a way as to prevent leakage.

Agricultural Wages Order

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated compliance cost of the most recent agricultural wages order. [58454]

Mr. Rooker: Agricultural wages orders are made by the Agricultural Wages Board which is an independent statutory body. The Board's most recent order, the Agricultural Wages Order 1998 (No. 2) came into effect on 1 October 1998. This order introduced a number of changes to bring the terms of the order into line with the provisions of the Working Time Regulations 1998, which also came into effect on 1 October. The most significant changes introduced were the extension of leave entitlements to casual workers who have been employed by the same employer for 13 weeks, and an entitlement to an unpaid 30 minute rest break.

Information on the compliance costs associated with the implementation of the Working Time Regulations is given in Annexe E to the consultation paper "Measures to Implement Provisions of the EC Directives on the Organisation of Working Time and the Protection of Young People at Work" (URN: 98/645). This was issued by the Department of Trade and Industry in April 1998.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Servants (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will provide a breakdown, in numerical and percentage terms, of the ethnic origin of civil servants in his Department, by grade, as at 1 October 1997. [56820]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The information for all Government Departments is as follows:

Information on the ethnic origin of civil servants is collected using a voluntary, confidential questionnaire. The number and percentage of civil servants from ethnic minorities who have submitted a questionnaire, by grade equivalents, for each Department, are set out in the tables. Civil Service employment statistics are centrally collected and updated annually, as at 1 April. Data for 1998 are still being collated, therefore the figures quoted in this answer are as at 1 April 1997.

Number of ethnic minority staff in post by department and responsibility level at 1 April 1997[1]

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will provide a breakdown, in numerical and percentage terms, of the ethnic origin of civil servants in his private office, as at 1 October 1997. [56822]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The information for all Government Departments is as follows:

Information on the ethnic origin of civil servants is collected using a voluntary, confidential questionnaire. The number and percentage of ethnic minority staff in Ministers' private offices are set out in the table. Civil Service employment statistics are collected and updated annually, as at 1 April. Data for 1998 are still being collated, therefore the figures quoted in this answer are as at 1 April 1997.

To protect the privacy of individual staff, data relating to fewer than five people are not disclosed in Civil Service equal opportunities monitoring.

Civil Service employment statistics are centrally collected and updated annually, as at 1 April. Data for 1998 are still being checked, therefore the figures quoted in this answer are as at 1 April 1997.

Government Cars

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many Government cars have been (i) stolen, (ii) hijacked and (iii) otherwise illegally lost to immediate use, broken down by (a) ministers' cars and (b) others since 1 May 1997. [57752]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for this matter have been delegated under the terms of its Framework Document to the Government Car and Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Sir Brian Mawhinney, dated November 1998:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office, has asked me in my capacity as Chief Executive of the Government Car and Despatch Agency to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the theft, hijacking, or other illegal loss of government cars. This Agency provides cars and drivers to some government departments. It is not responsible for all government cars.

Of those cars provided by this Agency since 1 May 1997, only one car has been stolen. This was in June 1998 and was a non ministerial car used mainly for driver training purposes. No other cars have been hijacked or suffered any other illegal loss of use.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Autism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she is taking to collect information centrally on autistic children in Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [57622]

Mr. McFall: Information on autistic children in Northern Ireland is not held centrally and we have no plans to collect such information. It is for Health and Social Services boards and Education and Library to determine the needs of children with autism in their respective areas and work to ensure that these needs are met.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she is taking to issue specific guidance on services for autistic children in Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [57621]

Mr. McFall: We have no plans to issue guidance specifically related to children with autism at this time. Guidance on services for children with disability, including those with autism, is contained in "The Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 Guidance and Regulations, Volume 5—Children with a Disability" published by HMSO in 1996.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what steps she is taking to ensure that educational authorities in Northern Ireland have sufficient funds to develop new services for autistic children; and if she will make a statement; [57626]

(2) if she will introduce a charter for persons with autism in line with the charter adopted at the fourth Autism European Congress in May 1992; and if she will make a statement. [57627]

(3) what steps she is taking to instruct each education authority in Northern Ireland to provide her with information on the provision of special educational facilities for children who suffer from autism or other forms of early childhood psychosis; and if she will make a statement; [57623]

(4) what steps she is taking to ensure that each child with autism in Northern Ireland receives a relevant educational service; and if she will make a statement. [57624]

Mr. McFall Education and Library Boards are required by legislation and funded by the Department of Education for Northern Ireland to assess and provide for all children in Northern Ireland with special educational needs, including autism. Special educational needs assessments are individual to each child, involving the provision of advice to Boards by a range of professionals, and statements of special educational needs are reviewed annually to ensure that the provision made remains relevant to each child's needs. Boards of Governors of schools also have the statutory duty to use their best endeavours to secure that if any registered pupil has special educational needs, the provision which his learning difficulty calls for is made. Provision is monitored by the Education and Training Inspectorate, who report satisfactory levels of provision and priority for autistic children. Information on provision and facilities for all children with special educational needs is readily available to the Department of Education from the education and Library boards.

Education and Library Boards in Northern Ireland already provide guidance on request in the range of educational services for children with special educational needs, including autistic spectrum disorder.

Industrial Site, Downpatrick

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to market the new industrial site currently under construction on the Belfast Road, Downpatrick, in the (a) United States of America, (b) Canada, (c) Central Europe and (d) the Far East; and what have been the results of the marketing exercise. [57338]

Mr. Ingram: The overseas marketing by the Industrial Development Board (IDB) present the business opportunity of Northern Ireland as a whole, to encourage potential Investors to visit. Rarely at this early stage do potential investors seek such details but Overseas Representatives of the IDB do visit sites when they are in Northern Ireland so that they can answer detailed questions. It is generally when potential investors visit Northern Ireland that they are keen to learn details of particular sites. This year there have been two visits to the Belfast Road site in Downpatrick.

HEALTH

Mental Health Spending

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate total public spending in real terms on mental health over the last 10 years. [57086]

Mr. Hutton: Mental health and mental ill health have a very wide impact and it is not possible to estimate total public expenditure.

Health expenditure taken from the Hospital and Community Health Services Programme Budget (at 1996–97 prices after allowing for Gross Domestic Product inflation) is shown in the following table:

£ million

Year	Total spend on mental illness (inpatient, outpatient, day patient and community mental illness nursing)
1986–87	1,866
1987–88	2,051
1988–89	2,147
1989–90	2,179
1990–91	2,171
1991–92	2,163
1992–93	2,493
1993–94	2,597
1994–95	2,522
1995–96	2,589
1996–97	2,801

Note:

Figures are not comparable throughout the period shown due to a number of factors 1) the changes in the data collection systems 2) revised NHS accounting practices 3) a change in the allocation of general practitioner fundholder expenditure.

Overall Local Authority Expenditure on mental illness is shown in the table:

£ million

Year	Overall amount (including the Mental Illness Specific Grant (MISG))
1991–92	203.11
1992–93	242.99
1993–94	304.50
1994–95	359.59
1995–96	418.50
1996–97	467.80
1997–98	65.59 (MISG only. Local authority expenditure not available)
1998–99	69.42 (MISG only. Local authority expenditure not available)

Note:

The above figures are shown at 1996–97 rates

Other specific funding since 1996/97 has been the Mental Health Challenge Fund, Emergency Pressures, Mentally Disordered Offenders Strategic Assistance Fund and the National Health Service Partnership Fund. Total expenditure is £64 million.

Accident and Emergency Units

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital accident and emergency units in (a) the North West of England and (b) England have been (i) closed and (ii) merged since 1 May 1997. [57178]

Mr. Milburn: This information is not collected centrally.

Midwives

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are made to protect midwives undertaking night calls. [57598]

Mr. Milburn: National Health Service employers are legally obliged to provide a safe system of work, a safe working environment, safe premises, adequate training and instructions and information which allows employees to ensure their safety at work. The guidance "Safer working in the Community" launched on the 28 October 1998, contains a great deal of information on how to reduce the risks from violence which community staff, including midwives, may encounter in their work.

Social Services

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of personal social services expenditure for each local authority in England and Wales for (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96, (c) 1996–97 and (d) 1997–98; and what is the percentage variation against standard spending assessment in each case. [58092]

Mr. Hutton: Details of personal social services expenditure by each local authority in England for 1994/95, 1995/96 and 1996/97 are available in the form of computer tables on the DH World Wide Web pages Internet reference http://www.open.gov.uk/doh/public/psstat.htm. Actual expenditure figures for 1997/98 are not yet available.

Copies of four tables which set out for each year by local authority, standing spending assessment, net expenditure and the percentage variation in each case have been placed in the Library. The figures on expenditure in the tables placed in the Library have been adjusted by Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions statisticians to make them comparable with standard spending assessments. This has meant excluding expenditure supported by special and specific grants and making some other technical changes.

Figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Influenza Vaccines

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued through what channels, on the vaccination of pensioners against influenza. [57862]

Ms Jowell: Influenza vaccine is recommended for all those in whom the disease is more likely to be a serious illness, so immunisation is recommended for:

those with chronic respiratory or heart disease or renal disease, diabetes and those who are immunosuppressed those living in long stay residential accommodation from this year, all those aged 75 and over.

The Chief Medical Officer (CMO) and Chief Nursing Officer wrote to doctors and nurses advising them of this extension in policy in a joint letter in August 1998 (Personal Letter/CMO98/4 Personal Letter/CNO/98/6) and a Health Services Circular (HSC 1998/140) was sent to health authorities. The Department has issued a poster and updated its two leaflets about influenza: 'What should I do about flu?' and 'Flu vaccination', available from surgeries and health centres. Copies are available in the Library.

On 19 October, the CMO launched 'Flu Awareness Week' at a press conference organised jointly with AIMS (the Association for Influenza Monitoring and Surveillance).

Liverpool Blood Transfusion Centre

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for investment in the Liverpool Blood Transfusion Centre; and if he will make a statement. [58074]

Mr. Hutton: Professor Alastair Bellingham, transitional director of the Liverpool Blood Transfusion Centre, is preparing a report for the National Blood Authority. We will consider the recommendations and options for investment when that report is ready.

Spitting

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the public health risks caused by individuals spitting in public places; [58183]

(2) if he will introduce measures to eradicate spitting in public places; and if he will make a statement. [58182]

Ms Jowell: The Department has no plans to introduce measures to eradicate spitting in public places.

Whilst spitting is an anti-social and disagreeable habit, it is very unlikely that diseases are spread via this route. Tuberculosis and other respiratory diseases are spread through breathing infected aerosolised droplets in the air, which are produced when an infected person coughs or sneezes. Since tuberculosis and other diseases are unlikely to be spread by spitting, measures aimed at eradicating spitting are unlikely to have any effect on the spread of disease.

Wheelchair Service

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the terms of reference for the current review of the wheelchair service for indoor and outdoor powered wheelchairs; when the contract for the review project was let; and what the deadline is for receipt of the contractor's report. [57772]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 2 November 1998]: In 1996 the then Government announced additional funding to enable health authorities to introduce the provision of electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs and a voucher scheme for wheelchair users. An evaluation study of the implementation and operation of these initiatives has now begun. The evaluation will critically examine the performance of health authorities and wheelchair service providers in meeting the objectives of the two initiatives; identify the features of successful implementation; and make recommendations on any further action which may be necessary either in relation to the objectives or to improve implementation across the National Health Service.

The contract for the evaluation study was formally awarded on 29 October 1998. The work is expected to be completed by 31 March 1999.

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review provision for those with learning disabilities and give guidance to health and social service authorities on best practice. [57747]

Mr. Hutton: We already have a substantial programme of work in hand to ensure the continued, appropriate development of health and social services for people with learning disabilities. This includes:

follow up to Moving into the Mainstream, the report of a Social Services Inspectorate (SSI) inspection of learning disability services in 1997;

follow up to Signposts for Success, good practice guidance on meeting the health needs of people with learning disabilities issued by the Department in January 1998;

a project to improve our understanding of the service models which have developed in recent years and give us a clearer picture of the services available for people with learning disabilities. The first phase involved a review of plans for learning disability hospital closures; the second is looking at the range and balance of health and social care services for people with learning disabilities in 24 local authority areas; and an advisory group involving key interests, including people with learning disabilities, has been set up to advise the Department on this programme of work. We will keep the need to issue further guidance under review.

Unwanted Pregnancies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to reduce the numbers of unwanted pregnancies. [56942]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 3 November 1998]: In November 1997, I announced the Government's commitment to reduce the rate of teenage conceptions and invited four individuals to make recommendations for the action which needs to be taken across four areas: sex and relationships education; counselling, advice and contraceptive services; vulnerable and hard to reach groups; and research. Their recommendations were received in the summer in a draft report drawn together by the Health Education Authority.

On 31 July, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister asked the Social Exclusion Unit (SEU) to work with other Departments building on the work undertaken by the Department of Health to develop an integrated strategy to cut rates of teenage parenthood, particularly under-age parenthood, towards the European average and to propose better solutions to combat the risk of social exclusion for vulnerable teenage parents and their children, reporting to Ministers by December. The SEU is consulting widely to develop its recommendations. Copies of the consultation letter have been placed in the Library.

The Department is also in the process of reviewing existing guidance on the provision of family planning services to all age groups. This updated guidance will be produced early in the New Year and will be aimed at Primary Care Groups as well as health authorities. The Department also continues to fund the Contraceptive Education Service, which provides information for health professionals and the general public.

NHS Trusts (Damages Awards)

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to mitigate the impact of large awards of damages on the budgets of NHS trusts and health authorities; and if he will make a statement. [57799]

Mr. Milburn: On 29 April 1998 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to a number of organisations representing professional, legal, National Health Service and patient interests seeking their views on what can be done to reduce the number of incidents which give rise to claims against NHS trusts and health authorities, how to manage patient expectation and how to improve the handling of claims which do arise. Officials are in the process of studying replies in order to identify suggestions which might be taken forward in the future.

Juveniles (Secure Accommodation)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer from the former Under-Secretary of State for Health, the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), on 11 March 1998, Official Report, column 203, how many places in local authority secure accommodation which were planned for after 1 May 1997 (a) have been provided and (b) were planned for on the latest date for which figures are available. [58414]

Mr. Hutton: All six places will be available for use early in 1999. The two projects that are providing these additional places have been in the planning stage since early 1997. The latest published Departmental statistics on children's secure accommodation provides details for year ending 31 March 1997.

Breastfeeding

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the advantages of breastfeeding for infants; and what steps his Department has taken to encourage women to breastfeed. [57793]

Ms Jowell: The Government are fully committed to the promotion of breastfeeding which is universally accepted as the best form of nutrition for infants. The Government's source of independent expert advice on infant feeding is the Panel on Child and Maternal Nutrition, which is a standing committee of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy (COMA). It recommends that babies should be breastfed exclusively for the first 4–6 months of life. In coming to a view and making recommendations, COMA reviews the published information and also seeks advice from experts in the field to ensure that it fully takes into account the latest research.

The Department offers support for research into breastfeeding through the Quinquennial Surveys of Infant Feeding Practice; the report of the 1995 survey was published last year. A project was commissioned in 1996 which has been ongoing until this year. This is a study on the impact of maternal nutrition (including breastfeeding) on health and development in healthy pre-term infants.

As part of the Government's research initiative on health inequalities, it has commissioned research, which started on the 1 November, aimed at identifying the barriers to breastfeeding in low income groups. Through the health technology assessment programme, in collaboration with the National Health Service Centre for Reviews and Dissemination, the Department is planning to fund a systematic review to evaluate the effectiveness of interventions to promote the uptake of breastfeeding. It has also funded a review of practices which prompte or inhibit breastfeeding, and this report will be published soon. Further work is also being carried out, however, as part of the mother and child health programme.

The Department funds the National Network of Breastfeeding Co-ordinators (NNBC). The NNBC has been established to promote breastfeeding at a local level and to share ideas nationally with a view to increasing both the number of mothers breastfeeding and the length of time they continue to breastfeed.

Each year the four United Kingdom Health Departments support National Breastfeeding Awareness Week to increase public awareness of the benefits of breastfeeding, which this year took place between 17–23 May. This year, as in other years, the Department funded and provided the publicity materials used during the week. These included posters and postcards aimed at promoting breastfeeding with the slogan "Free fast food for babies".

The Department also provides financial support to the three main voluntary organisations in this area, the National Childbirth Trust, La Leche League and the Association of Breastfeeding Mothers. Close links are also kept with United Nations Children's Fund Baby Friendly Initiative which includes a Departmental observer sitting on the Steering Committee of the UK Baby Friendly Initiative.

The "Informed Choice Initiative" produces a series of leaflets (including one on breastfeeding), designed to allow women to make informed choices about their own maternity care.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what programmes he has promoted to educate men and women aged between 25 and 40 years on the importance of diet in the prevention of osteoporosis. [57794]

Ms Jowell: A healthy and balanced diet is important for all age groups to help reduce the risk of a number of illnesses, including osteoporosis. For this reason, we continue to promote healthy eating messages to all age groups and in particular to commission the Health Education Authority to incorporate healthy eating messages in their health education materials. None of these programmes have been specifically aimed at men and women between the ages of 25 and 40 years. However the health advice that promotes the importance of diet in the prevention of osteoporosis is valuable for people of all ages.

The Osteoporosis Strategy I launched earlier this year highlighted the various factors which play an important role in reducing the risk of osteoporosis. Maintaining a healthy diet with adequate calcium and vitamin D is just one aspect. Also as important is regular exercise, particularly weight bearing exercise, and avoiding smoking and excessive alcohol consumption. Such factors may play a part in the prevention of osteoporosis. Therefore the Osteoporosis Strategy provides valuable advice on lifestyle measures for reducing the risk of osteoporosis which applies to all age groups.

Work-related Stress

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local health authorities provide workplace counselling and effective employment assistance programmes to combat work-related stress in the NHS. [57798]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not collected centrally. As part of the new strategic framework for managing human resources in the National Health Service the NHS Executive has identified the provision of counselling services for all staff as a priority for local action.

Cancer

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (1) the success rates for curing the most common form of childhood leukaemia in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Sweden, (f) Denmark and (g) the United States of America in the last five years for which figures are available; [58110]

(2) the success rates for curing lung cancer in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Sweden, (f) Denmark and (g) the United States of America in the last five years for which figures are available; [58100]

(3) the success rates for curing cervical cancer in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Sweden, (f) Denmark and (g) the United States in the last five years for which figures are available; [58111]

(4) the success rates for curing prostate cancer in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Sweden, (f) Denmark and (g) the United States of America in the last five years for which figures are available; [58099]

(5) the success rates for curing colon cancer in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Sweden, (f) Denmark and (g) the United States in the last five years for which figures are available; [58101]

(6) the success rates for curing breast cancer in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Sweden, (f) Denmark and (g) the United States of America in the last five years for which figures are available. [58103]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Dennis Skinner, dated 5 November 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent questions on success rates for treating cancer.

The latest available information on the survival of cancer patients in Europe is given in "Survival of cancer patients in Europe—The EUROCARE Study" (International Agency for Research on Cancer Scientific Publications No. 132); a copy is available in the House of Commons library. Results for the United States are given on pages 188 and 189 of "Cancer Epidemiology and Prevention" (2nd edition) edited by D Schottenfeld and JF Fraumeni—copies of these pages are attached and copies will be placed in the House of Commons library.

Figures are not available on whether or not patients are cured—although when the relative survival curve "flattens off" the patients are dying at the same rate as the general population (same age and sex). Also, for most cancers (but not breast cancer or multiple myeloma), five year relative survival rates are often taken to be 'cure' rates.

TREASURY

Growth Forecasts

15. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made by his Department of the IMF's recent downgrading of forecasts for growth in the UK economy in comparison with other EU countries. [56874]

Mr. Byers: The IMF's latest forecast for growth in the UK in 1999 is broadly in line with the Government's forecast as set out in the Pre Budget Report published on 3 November.

25. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on forecasts for growth. [56885]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor of the Exchequer receives numerous representations on all aspects of UK economic developments, including growth prospects.

European Central Bank

16. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the methods the European central bank will employ to achieve price stability in Europe. [56875]

Ms Hewitt: The European Central Bank (ECB) made a preliminary announcement on their monetary policy strategy on the 13 October. They set out their definition of price stability as a year-on-year increase in the Harmonised Index of Consumer Prices (HICP) of less than 2% and announced that, in order to achieve this, they will give prominence to a broad monetary aggregate target and will also monitor a wide range of economic and financial variables.

Economic Stability

17. Caroline Flint: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to encourage economic stability. [56877]

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to encourage economic stability. [56873]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Pre-Budget Report sets out how the Government are taking action to steer a stable course for lasting prosperity.

International Financial Institutions

18. Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has put forward for the reorganisation of international financial institutions. [56878]

Ms Hewitt: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer reported to the House earlier this week on 2 November 1998, Official Report, columns 559-63, significant reforms to strengthen the international financial system and improve the effectiveness of the international financial institutions were announced on 30 October by the Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors of the G7 countries. These reforms reflect the shared determination of the G7 countries, under the Presidency of the UK, to put in place new rules and procedures and to modernise the international financial architecture to meet the challenges of the global economy.

Exchange Rates

20. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss exchange rates. [56880]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor has regular meetings with the Governor of the Bank of England, where they discuss a wide range of issues.

PSBR

21. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has held with Scottish local authorities relating to the Treasury's definition of the public sector borrowing requirement. [56881]

Mr. Byers: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has not held any discussions relating to the definition of the PSBR with Scottish local authorities but he would be interested in receiving their views.

Government Statistics

22. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to improve the accuracy of Government statistics. [56882]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are committed to enhancing the integrity of official statistics. The Green Paper "Statistics: A Matter of Trust" was published in February and set out options to ensure that official statistics are of assured quality and produced and presented in a way which is free from political interference. In the light of the subsequent consultation exercise, the Government's proposals will be set out in a White Paper.

Global Credit

23. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Government are taking to prevent a global credit crunch. [56883]

Ms Hewitt: G7 Finance Ministers and central bank Governors have emphasised their commitment to create or sustain conditions for strong domestic demand led growth and preserve financial stability in their own economies.

Pensions Mis-selling

24. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the measures he has put in place to ensure that people who have been mis-sold private pensions are compensated. [56884]

30. Mr. Pond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to ensure that compensation is paid to people who were mis-sold private pensions. [56890]

Ms Hewitt: The regulatory system for investment firms was set up under the Financial Services Act (1986), and the regulators have implemented the review of pensions mis-selling under the provisions of the Act.

The latest evidence is that, in 78 per cent. of priority cases, reviews have been completed.

Productivity

26. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about his policy to use the tax system to promote productivity increases in UK firms. [56886]

Mr. Gordon Brown: With business, we are putting in place a strategy to tackle the long-term economic weakness of a 40 per cent. productivity with our most successful competitors. The Pre-Budget Report sets out what we must do over the coming year to help equip the British economy for the challenges ahead.

Bank of England

27. Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings he has had with the Governor of the Bank of England so far in the current year. [56887]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor has had regular meetings with the Governor of the Bank of England throughout the course of this year.

Single Currency

28. Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about his policy on the single currency. [56888]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's policy on UK membership of the single currency was set out by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in a statement to the House on 27 October 1997, Official Report, columns 583–88.

The Government believe that, in principle, British membership of a successful single currency could be beneficial to Britain and to Europe. Our national economic interest will be the key factor in deciding whether or not we should join. There is no constitutional bar to UK membership of the single currency.

The Government have concluded that the UK economy has neither the flexibility nor the convergence with the other European economies to make joining in 1999 in our national economic interest. The UK needs a period of stability and settled convergence before we can join. Barring some fundamental and unforeseen change in economic circumstances making a decision to join during this Parliament is not realistic. The job for this Parliament is to prepare in order to create a realistic option of joining early in the next Parliament, if Government, Parliament and the British people agree.

34. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Government plan to inform the public about the single European currency. [56894]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's communication campaign on the euro is not a general public education campaign but is specifically targeted at ensuring that UK businesses, especially small and medium sized firms, are aware of the implications of the introduction of the single currency from 1 January 1999 and have the information they need to address the issues arising from this.

Withholding Tax

29. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards the proposed European withholding tax. [56889]

Dawn Primarolo: We are in favour of effective international action against tax evasion. Action confined to the Community will be limited in its effectiveness but may be useful as part of a move towards wider action. However, we will not agree to any course of action which would seriously damage the UK and other European financial markets.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the proposed European withholding tax. [56879]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are taking an active part in discussions on the draft Directive. We have made it clear on a number of occasions that we will not agree to any course of action which would seriously damage the UK and other European financial markets.

Dividend Income (Pensioners)

31. Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he has made with measures to address the anomaly of low-income pensioners facing taxation of their dividend income. [56891]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 37.

Interest Rates

32. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will instruct the Bank of England Monetary Policy Committee to meet more frequently to determine UK interest rate policy; and if he will make a statement. [56892]

Ms Hewitt: The Bank of England Act 1998 states that the Monetary Policy Committee should meet at least once a month. The Act also states that the Governor of the Bank may summon a meeting at any time on giving such notice as in his judgment the circumstances may require.

36. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the factors that underlie the level of interest rates in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Germany. [56896]

Ms Hewitt: Interest rates in the UK are set by the Bank of England to deliver the Government's inflation target of 2½ per cent. RPIX inflation. The Bundesbank sets interest rates in Germany in pursuit of price stability.

Low-income Families

33. Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to assist working families on low incomes. [56893]

Mr. Gordon Brown: From April, as a result of abolishing the entry fee to National Insurance, all employees will receive a tax cut of more than £1 a week. The Working Families Tax Credit will be introduced guaranteeing a minimum income of at least £190 a week for the working families. This will back-up the national minimum wage which will be introduced in April next year, helping 1.9 million employees.

Unemployment

35. Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what forecast he has made for unemployment in 1999. [56895]

Ms Hewitt: In line with the convention adopted by previous administrations, the Government do not publish a forecast for unemployment.

Economic Activity

37. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss levels of economic activity. [56897]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor has regular meetings with the Governor of the Bank of England where they discuss a wide range of issues.

Farming (Young People)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people under the age of 25 years have taken up farming as a career in each of the last 10 years; and what estimate he has made of the figure in the current year. [58136]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 4 November 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Maclean, dated 5 November 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on young people taking up farming as a career.

The precise information requested is not available. However, the Labour Force Survey (LFS), which is the ONS's major up to date source of occupational data, can provide estimates of those employed in farming occupations who were not employed in such occupations a year earlier. The attached table shows estimates from the spring LFS back to 1988. The vast majority of those covered are classified as agricultural workers rather than farmers according to the Socio-Economic classification of their stated occupation. These figures may include some full-time students and others not intending taking up farming as a career.

As with any sample survey LFS estimates are subject to sampling variability. The sampling variability (expressed as the range within which 95% of estimates taken from different samples would be expected to fall) of these estimates is roughly +/–20%.

Labour Statistics (Scotland)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were registered as unemployed in each constituency in Scotland (a) in May 1997 and (b) at the most recent available date. [58341]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 5 November 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on how many people were registered as unemployed in each constituency in Scotland.

The information you have requested can only be derived from the monthly claimant count of people claiming unemployment-related benefits (i.e. Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance credits). Essentially, all people who were claiming these benefits on the count day are counted.

The number of people claiming unemployment-related benefits in each Parliamentary Constituency in Scotland can be obtained from the Nomis database which is accessible by the House of Commons Library.

Registered Maternities

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 October 1998, Official

Report, columns 929–30, concerning numbers of registered maternities, if the information can be provided for the most recent single year for which data are available. [58078]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Kerry Pollard, dated 5 November 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary question on maternities in 1997.

High-payment Annuities

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to facilitate high-payment annuities for people of over 75 years of age with low incomes. [58264]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 November 1998]: I would expect the annuities market to determine what rates of annuity are paid to individuals who buy annuities at a later time of life.

Mortality Rates

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the probability of (a) a man and (b) a woman who reaches the age of 18 years in 1998 living up to or beyond the age of (i) 60, (ii) 65, (iii) 70, (iv) 75 and (v) 80 years. [57940]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 November 1998]: Using the projected future mortality rates underlying the 1996-based population projections for the United Kingdom carried out by the Government Actuary's Department, it is estimated that the probability of someone aged 18 in the United Kingdom living up to or beyond the age of 60, 65, 70, 76 and 80 is as follows:

	Probability of someone aged 18 in the UK reaching age
	60	65	70	75	80
Male	917	875	806	703	556
Female	942	919	877	808	703

Customs and Excise

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the staffing levels of HM Customs and Excise offices along the South Coast. [56867]

Dawn Primarolo: The deployment of Customs' anti-smuggling staff around the UK is determined by the assessed risk of smuggling in any one area, and is reviewed regularly. Furthermore, the management by Customs of import and export cargo controls has been the subject of a detailed analysis over the past two years to ensure that efficiency and effectiveness at South Coast ports provides a good service for the users and value for money to the taxpayer. HM Customs and Excise are satisfied that current Customs resourcing levels along the South Coast are sufficient.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what arrangements employers whose PAYE and NIC liabilities are too small to cover the statutory maternity pay and statutory sick pay due to their employees may apply to the Inland Revenue for funding; and if he will set out for each available year since 1990 the number and total, average and median amounts of such funding payments and the numbers of employers and employees in respect of whom such funding arrangements were made. [58139]

Dawn Primarolo: Employers whose PAYE and NICs liabilities for a month/quarter are too small to cover the statutory maternity pay and statutory sick pay due to their employees would refer to The Employee's Quick Guide to PAYE and NICs (Card 18). This would instruct them to deduct the amount owed to them from the following month/quarter payment to the Inland Revenue. If this will not be possible they are instructed to write to the Accounts Office with which they deal explaining their calculations and requesting an advance to enable them to make the payment to the employee.

The numbers and values of such payments made by the Accounts Offices in each of the last 4 years are recorded as:

Year	Cumbernauld	Shipley	Total	Amount (£)
1995	7,024	4,336	11,360	5,553,414
1996	6,968	4,537	11,505	5,728,183
1997	7,641	4,843	12,484	6,865,685
1998	7,956	5,231	13,187	7,529,098

It is not possible to break these figures down further to say how many employers or employees were involved or whether the payments were for refunded PAYE, statutory maternity pay or statutory sick pay.

Disabled Person's Tax Credit

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultation his Department has had with disability groups over the formulation of the disabled person's tax credit. [56943]

Dawn Primarolo: Inland Revenue officials have begun a series of informal discussions with representatives of disability groups in addition to their continuing consultations with representatives of employers, who will be responsible for paying the disabled person's tax credit through the wage packet from April 2000.

Charities Taxation

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of his announcement of a review of the VAT exemption on the position of those charities appealing to the VAT and Duties Tribunal against the imposition of VAT on welfare services provided by them. [58306]

Ms Hewitt: Customs and Excise are asking the VAT and Duties Tribunal temporarily to suspend appeals by charities, while they consult interested parties on the circumstances in which home support services will be exempt from VAT as charity welfare services.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much has been paid in VAT by charities for the provision of home support services in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [58307]

(2) how many charities are currently liable for VAT for the provision of home support services. [58308]

Ms Hewitt: There are no specific data on the numbers of charities accounting for VAT on their supplies of home support services, or on the amount of that VAT. In light of a recent Tribunal decision Customs are reviewing their policy on charity welfare services and are consulting interested parties to agree the circumstances in which home support services will be exempt from VAT.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors underlie the delay in publishing the response to the consultation arising from the review of charities taxation; and if he will make a statement. [58194]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) on 26 October 1998, Official Report, column 40.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the Vehicle Excise Duty payable on (a) 40 tonne and (b) 41 tonne heavy goods vehicles from 1 January 1999. [58309]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced that he is reviewing the system for setting Vehicle Excise Duty (VED) rates for lorries to ensure that the environmental damage caused by lorries is reflected in their VED rates. The review is taking into account the wider environmental impacts of lorries, as well as considerations of their physical effects on the road infrastructure. The VED payable from 1 January 1999 for the new vehicles are set out in the table:

New Vehicles	VED rates from 1 January 1999 (until the next Budget)
Rigid 17–18t (2 axles)	1,320
Artic 36t (4 axles)	5,170
Artic 38t (4 axles)
Artic 40t (5 axles)	3,210
Artic 41t (6 axles)	1,280
Artic 44t (5 axles)	2,280

New higher rates will be announced in the next Budget, to discourage strongly the use of vehicles with 11½ tonne axle weights, in view of the additional road damage that they cause.

Golf Clubs

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on VAT treatment of subscriptions for (a) private golf clubs and (b) proprietary clubs. [58252]

Dawn Primarolo: Playing subscriptions to non-profit making sports clubs are exempt from VAT. Subscriptions to proprietary clubs are liable to VAT at 17.5 per cent.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on revenue as a result of the rejection on 6 May 1998 of an appeal by Keswick Golf Club and others to the VAT and Duties Tribunal relating to the VAT status of green fees at members' clubs in (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–01, and (d) 2001–02. [58172]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs estimate that the decision of the VAT and Duties Tribunal saved them from having to repay £30 million of VAT revenue to non-profit making golf clubs. They also estimate that the revenue yield from VAT on green fees charged by non-profit making golf clubs is £10 million a year.

Taxation (Car Users)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the level of tax on car users. [57470]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor has received a number of representations about the excise duty on hydrocarbon oil and the impact on car users. All of the representations will be carefully considered in the run up to the next Budget.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will calculate the total income received by Her Majesty's Government from all forms of car tax, vehicle excise duty, VAT on car sales, and hydro-carbon taxes in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 to date. [57471]

Ms Hewitt: Car tax was abolished with effect from 12 November 1992.

£ million

	1997–98	1998–99 (to September 1998)
Vehicle excise duty	4,487	2,353
Hydro-carbon taxes for road fuels	19,245	10,277

It is not possible to estimate the Government's income from VAT on car sales except at disproportionate cost.

Impoverished Countries (Debt)

Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the figures calculated by the Jubilee 2000 Coalition in its report "In Our Own Backyard", concerning the cost of cancellation of debts owed to Britain by the most impoverished countries. [58076]

Ms Hewitt: Many of the figures in tables "In Our Own Backyard" have been taken from answers to parliamentary questions and/or from ECGD and DFID. Officials have not checked all the individual numbers produced by Jubilee 2000; nor is it possible, at this stage, to estimate reliably the final cost of debt relief to the Exchequer. The tables do not set out the extent to which the UK government support poor countries through their aid programme. The UK gives significantly more money in aid to the world's poorest countries than it receives in debt repayments. In 1997–98, for example, DFID's bilateral aid programme to the 40 countries identified under the HIPC initiative was just under £200 million while in the same period the UK received only £31 million in debt repayments from these countries.

Anti-avoidance Rule

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the annual cost of the Inland Revenue providing pre-transaction clearances following the introduction of a general anti-avoidance rule on the basis of (a) a 30 day turn-round time and (b) a 60 day turn-round time, ensuring no charges are made to the taxpayer. [58021]

Dawn Primarolo: No such estimate has been made. Consultation on a possible General Anti-avoidance Rule (GAAR) is still in progress, and is addressing the general principles of a GAAR.

VAT (Sport)

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times, and on what occasions, HM Customs and Excise has consulted (a) the European Commission and (b) the Association of Golf Course Owners since the withdrawal of the VAT (Sport, Sports Competitions and Physical Education) Order 1998 with regard to its redrafting. [58177]

Dawn Primarolo: Although there have been no consultations, Customs have periodic discussions with the Association of Golf Course Owners.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amendment of the recent European Court of Justice ruling against the Kingdom of Spain (Case C-124/96, Judgment of the Court, Sixth Chamber, of 7 May 1998) has been made by HM Customs and Excise for the redrafting of the VAT (Sport, Sports Competitions and Physical Education) Order 1998; and if he will make a statement on the implications of that ruling for the redrafting. [58174]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs do not expect the ruling to have any implications for a replacement Order.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the HM Customs and Excise Press Release 06/98 regarding the VAT (Sport, Sports Competitions and Physical Education, Order 1998, how the Government defines 'genuine' non-profit making clubs. [58164]

Dawn Primarolo: Non-profit making clubs will be defined in any replacement for the VAT (Sports, Sports Competitions and Physical Education) Order 1998.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on revenue as a result of the recent European Court of Justice ruling against the Kingdom of Spain (Case C-124/96, Judgment of the Court, Sixth Chamber, of 7 May 1998). [58175]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs do not expect the ruling to have any current effect on revenue.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of the costs that the Government were ordered to pay by the European Court of Justice (Case C-124/96, Judgment of the Court, Sixth Chamber, of 7 May 1998) as a result of HM Treasury's support of the Kingdom of Spain; and if he will list those costs. [58173]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government were not ordered to pay any costs.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those organisations with which HM Customs and Excise have liaised during their discussions with interested parties with regard to the redrafting of the VAT (Sport, Sports Competitions and Physical Education) Order 1998. [58176]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs have had discussions with the Central Council of Physical Recreation, the English Golf Union, the National Golf Clubs' Advisory Association, the Sports and Recreational Trusts Association and the Association of Golf Course Owners.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the names of those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 May 1997, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed, and whether they receive remuneration. [56757]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by the then Economic Secretary on 17 December 1997, Official Report, columns 189–90. Since then, the following additional appointments have been made.

Act of Union (Bicentenary Coin)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government will commission a special coin from the Royal Mint to celebrate the bicentenary of the Act of Union between Ireland and Great Britain. [58072]

Ms Hewitt: No decisions have yet been made about which, if any, events will be commemorated in this way in 2001.

VAT (Alcoholic Drinks)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when ministers last met representatives of the brewing and distilling companies to discuss the current and future levels of taxation levelled on alcoholic drinks. [58193]

Dawn Primarolo: I last met the Trade Associations representing the brewing and distilling industries just before the last Budget in order to discuss their Budget Representations. The exact dates are as follows: Wine and Spirits Association—18 February 1998; Brewers and Licensed Retailers Association—23 February 1998; Scotch Whisky Association and Gin and Vodka Association—24 February 1998.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 318

SESSION 1997–98

26th October—5th November 1998

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
